[For the Agitator.] One Thousand Miles over the Rocks of Tioga County.

BY ANDREW SHERWOOD, ASSISTANT GEOLOGIST ON THE ORIO SURVIY. CHAPTER VII.

THE COAL MEASURES. "And God said let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind."

Like Gulliver, the hero in Swift's wondrous tale, who lost himself in a gigantic corn field, where the corn grew up tall as the trees of the forest-so we have wandered down the vale of years, until finally, far away in the mighty prospect, where the mist of the unmeasured centuries hangs dark and heavy, we stand on the level savannas of the carboniferous world,-lost in a forest of gigantic ferns and palms. In every reeking marsh, grow the rank Calamite and the somber Sigillaria; but there is no flower to enliven the funereal depths ruped comes forth, by day or night, to print: seek its prey, for the atmosphere is charged with deadly carbon. Only clouds of insects darken the fir, like swarms of musquitoes in some booky Knowye, all good people, that I am doing dell, at the close of a summer day. All Land Office Business, is silent in those green and luxuriant woods, and we seem to see, "in the multitude of trunks darkened above by clouds of foliage, the slim columns of an elder Alhambra,"

But those graceful columns—the Sigillaria and the Lepidodendron-whose green branches mantled the earth in that age long gone by, have been extinct for untold centuries. We may enter the gloomy galleries which the miner has dug in the rock-ribbed mountains, and see their charred and carbonized we are treading over the imprisoned sunbeams which warmed them into life: but, like the tumuli of the Mound-Builders, which dot the prairies of the Far West, no spirit comes forth to tell us of their history .- We only know that they grew on a level continent, having very warm and moist climate, and but little elevated above the sea. The Lepidodendron was a very large tree, somewhat resembling the modern tree-ferns of the tropics, and the common groundpines of our own section. But while the tree-fern attains a height of only four or five feet, and the ground-pine as many inches, the Lepidodendron raised its hirsute branches nearly a hundred feet over the soil, and along with coniferous trees allied to the pines of Norfolk Island, are supposed to have covered the drier plains. The Calamite resembled the common horse-tail (Equisetum Fluviatile) of our swamps; but unlike this humble plant, it attained to for the next 25 years. Besides no man has a biga height of thirty feet. The Sigillaria -an associate of the Calamite in the marshes-often reached a height of seventy feet; and such was their abundance, that there are large seams of coal which are composed principally of their remains. Beneath these palm-like trees, there was a dense undergrowth of ferns. whose fronds are now spread out between the layers of shale in the most perfect state of preservation. Over 300 species have been found in the Coal Measures, while there are no more than whole of Europe at the present day.

It is now believed by all geologists of any note, that coal is of vegetable origin, because it consists of vegetable tissues, while the accompanying shales contain numerous roots, leaves, and trunks of trees. The peculiar conditions trunks of trees. The peculiar conditions under which it was produced, were doubtless similar to those existing in the peat bogs of our own times, only on a much grander scale. In those ancient and widely extended marshes, just as in the Great Dismal Swamp of Virginia at the present day, vegetation flourished and decayed until a deposit of carbonaceous matter, sufficient to form a bonaceous matter, sufficient to form coal bed, had accumulated, when the land subsided beneath the waters, and strata of sand and clay were thrown down. This process was continued thro' a long period of time, until all the veins of coal had been produced. The coal beds mark the eras when the surface remained stationary; while the sandstones point to times of subsidence.— Bituminous and anthracite coal were both formed in the same manner, and belong to the same age, only the latter has been subjected to a greater amount of heat and pressure. Allowing for reduction in bulk by compression, decomposition, and the loss of carbon, it would require eight feet in depth of vegetable matter to make our feet of his vegetable matter to make one foot of bi-tuminous coal, and twelve feet to make one of anthracite. For a bed of anthracite thirty feet thick, like that at Wilkesbarre, the vegetable debris must have been over 300 feet thick; and for a bed of bituminous coal six feet thick, like that at Morris Run, it must have been that at Morris Run, it must have been nearly fifty feet in thickness. It is supposed that all the forests of the United States at the present day, would not make a bed of coal equal in extent to the great Pittsburg seam.

Coal may be justly considered as one of the mainsprings of modern civilization and progress. Wherever this mineral exists, there you will find the elements of wealth and power. England, the most poworful nation of Europe, occupies only a small group of islands; yet the 100,000,000 tons of coal which she annually produces, has embled her she annually produces, has enabled her to extend her power over the entire globe; and it is her boast that the sun never sets on her possessions. Together with iron, it likewise forms the Kraft and Stoff of our attainments. During the past year, the anthracite and bituminous mines of Pennsylvania produced more than 25,000,000 tons of coal, specie. 5,000,0000 of which were devoted to the development of motive power, which was equal to the labor of 26,000,000 of men. The amount of anthracite coal yet in Pennsylvania, is 13,171,828,500 tons, which will give us an annual supply of 20,000,000 tons for 600 years. But ply of 20,000,000 tons for 600 years. But yast as is this undeveloped treasure, it is quite insignificant when compared to the bituminous coal deposits in the western half of our State. These deposits are so stupendous, that, could their value be realized at once, it would pay our national debt nearly sixty times. Such facts indicate to the observing mind where the seat of empire will be in future ages. They compel us to believe that Providence has designed this to be a country where mind shall make mighty strides on the high-road to perfection, that here a republic about ty strides on the high-road to perfec-tion; that here a republic shall be es-tablished, which shall be a terror to ty-rants, and the glory of which shall last a thousand years.

THIS UNEQUALLED BOOK concerns the property, business, individual rights, and social privileges of every one, and affords a fund of legal knowledge that to many will make it worth its weight in gold. The simplicity of its instructions, the comprehensiveness of its subject, the accuracy of its details, the facilities afforded in its perfect arrangement, and the consiseness and attractiveness of its style, as well as its cheapness, make it the most desirable of the legal hand-book. No effort or expense had been spared in adapting it thoroughly to the times, and affording in it the most recent and useful information. Linen and White Goods
