A song for the sunshiny weather ! And what does it matter the time o' the year, When you and I are together? A song for the summer, flying south,

And if I were the bird with the golden mouth I would not care to delay her. All the year round my skies are blue, Into your blue eyes gazing; Shining, smiling, tender and true-

A flattering song to stay her !

Oh, these are the ones for praising ! The best of mine that the year could claim Were a homage but half hearted, For I know the brightness will be the same When her bloom is all departed.

When out of the world the sunshine elips, Its heard the hearth-stone showih; The one light suffereth no colipse, Whatever the way it goeth.

It's you that's wearing the summer's crown, To you all sweet names gather; It's you I love when the snows are down-Oh, let me sing you rather!

Bor though I whisper it unaware, Your name is a spell that raises All singing sprites that dwell in the air, Making a sheaf of praises.

A song to the youth our years above, Holding all worlds in tether; It suits all seasons, my love, my love,

While you and I are together !--CARL SPENCER, in April No. of Harpers.

MILKING.

Few people are aware of the great difference the mere process of milking makes in the yield of a dairy cow. Many imagine that they are good milkers than any other store in this vicinity, which is when they are really very poor ones, so better. We hav just received a far as the ability to bring a cow to her largest possible yield. To understand how this difference can exist, it must be considered that a large proportion of what a cow gives at any particular milking, is actually secreted during the milking process. The milk stored up in the milk reservoirs can be drawn by any tolerably skillful milker, but unless the cow and the milker are in sympathy, so to speak, unless the animal is content and satisfied; with the milker and the circumstances, the secretion of new supplies during the process of milking will not take place. There is a close and intimate connection between the nervous and secretory systems, and this explains the fact that the cow will often "hold up her milk," as it is termed. It shows also that every milker should strive to be on good terms with the cow he is about to milk. If he is a perfect stranger to her, he should take some time to gain her confidence and good will by handling bergently and patting her, or by giving her something she is found of to eat.

We know a-milker who can increase the fllow of milk more than a quart a DRESS SILKS, FRENCH POPLINS, &c week by the mere difference in the mode of milking, and without the slightest change in the food of the anifact that her regular milker is quite as good as the average, and no doubt thinks he knows how to milk as well as anybody.

It is not always fair to judge of the milking qualities of a cow without taking into consideration the question as to who milks her, and how this operation is performed. A poor milker will, spoil the reputation of any cow. - Boston Cultivator.

Kill the Weeds

The weeds are after the strength of our land. We must fight them or they will get the uper hand. In a wet sea son how they rise and possess the soil. Thus the yellow daisy first, then the white daisy to take its place in a week or two after its disappearance, that is whore within 100 miles. Our after it has gone to seed. These are two of the great pests that crowd out the grain; they are bardy, and they will do it. So will the milk weed; you cannot do anything with this thick, tough plant. Pull it and it will still grow .-Your heaviest grain is nothing to it. It will break your cradle and do other damage. And the Canada thistle. Have we not named enough already? And we have scare commenced yet. How many farms are there that have not these weeds? It needs but a well season to bring them out conspicuously. They eat up our substance. They eat up the food of the grain. Interlopers, we permit them to do this. But they, are there, and how will you get rid of

There is one way, and only one relia-ble. It is good, old fashioned, but discarded, symmer fallow. Keep, them from seeing the light and they will die. Two winters and one summer in succession is too much for them.

BE SOCIAL AT HOME:-Let parents talk much and talk well at home. A father who is habitually silent in his own house, may be in many respects a wise man, but he is not wise in his silence. We sometimes see parents, who are the life of every company which they enter, dull, silent, uninteresting at home among the children. If they have not mental activity and mental stores sufficient for both, let them first provide for their own household. Ireland exports beef and wheat, and lives on potatoes; and they fare as poorly who reserve their social charms for companions abroad, and keep dullness for home consumption. It is better to instruct children and make them happy at home than it is to charm strangers or amuse friends. A silent house is a dull place for young people—a place from which they will escape, if they can. They will talk or think of being "shut up" there; and the youth who does not love home is in danger.
