Paris, and at last at Metz, with the army. Marshal M'Mahon's official report of the late battle says:

"The enemy, in greatly superior numbers, began the attack at 7 o'clock on Saturday morning. The first attack having been repulsed, about noon the enemy reopened the contest, throwing forward numerous sharmshooters, proforward numerous sharpshooters, protected by six guns in a commanding position. Masses of Infantry were then brought up, and at 4 o'elock in the af-ternoon M'Mahon was forced to order a retreat, which was effected in good or der, the enemy's pursuit being without vigor, and by no means troublesome.— The Marshal was able to send only a partial list of the killed and wounded." The London correspondent of the

When half of our army had crossed over, the Prossians suddenly attacked in great force. After a fight of four hours, they were repulsed with great loss to them."

And this is King William's account:

"The Queen of Frussiano day received the following dispatch, dated in the vicinity of Metz, Sunday evening:

The Tribune says: "Our latest dispatches indicate more clearly the completeness of these disasters and the nature of the operations which have caused them. They dissipate nearly every hope of the escaps of the French army, and reveal the immi-

Many other thousands, scattered for days in the mountains, finally escaped to the neighboring for-tresses, and are there besieged. THE HOUSE OF ORLEANS.

In the present situation of affairs in France, the succession to the throne becomes a matter of interest. A general opinion prevails that the end of the Napoleonic dynasty is near.

In 1849, Louis Napoleon 'declared his adhesion to the doctrine of Republicanism, in the following proclamation to the French people:

"I re-appear among you as a warm and true democrat and republican. I take the shadow of the man of the century as the symbol of the pro-mise which I now solemnly make. I will be, as with gratitude the reception I have I always was, a child of France. In every French found within your walls, and I hope that in more joyous times I may be able republic is the object of my admiration, and I to return to thank you for your noble will be her minister. Never will I try to clothe myself in imperial robes. My heart ceases to be to the day when I forget what I owe to you beat on the day when I forget what I owe to you what I owe to France. May my lips ever be closed, if I say a word against the republican sovereignty of the French people. May I be cursed, if I suffer doctrines to be taught in my name contrary to democratic principles and the name contrary to democratic principles and the facts with any considerable precision.—

That election taught him a lesson. It told him that something must be done to unite the French people, or his house to unite the French people, or his house to unite the French people, or his house to make the state of the must fall. all of whom, we believe, are surviving. But the right of these sons is cut off by the canon of descent, which casts the crown upon the oldest son and his descendants, in preference to all others. In the present attitude of affairs, therefore, it is more than likely that the Bourbons will be restored to the supreme power in France, unless, in the general strife, the French people shall be led to adopt a republican form of government. But Europe is not ripe for Republicanism. The great powers would not submit to the establishment of any government in France which
