MISCELLANEOUS. COAL OIL JOHNNY.

THE UPS AND DOWNS OF AN OIL PRINCE. A correspondent writing from Oil City, Pa., gives the following interesting account of the career and present whereabouts of Steele, known throughout the country a few years since as "Coal Oil Johnny".

Some four miles from the city, directly in the line of the Oil Creek and Allegheny River valleys, lies a large tract celebrated as the "M'Clintock Farm".

There is nothing new to distinguish it particularly from other sections of the immediate vicinity, all being played out alike.

It may be a source of satisfaction to some who read this sketch, to learn that Blooom, who was responsible more than all others for Steele's course, died in jail, a year or two since, where he had been for some months incarcerated, being unable to obtain $300 bail.

On Thursday morning a woman residing at Wayland, N. Y., heard a ring at the door.

She opened the door and found the man who had been shot by her.

Church Column. Having asked for space in a secular paper for what is known as "The Church Column," the writer deems it proper that some explanation should be given of the object as to the aim and end which pursue it.

While admitting the necessity of politics and of political discussion, the columns of our newspapers, will look with favor upon all efforts on their part to bring science and literature within reach of the millions; we cannot but think that, so long as we are not dogmatically a Christian people, and a therefore professed believers in a life more enduring than our interests higher than those of time and sense,—it ought not to be deemed altogether foreign to the scope of even the secular press.

Now, as in the cases supposed above, he would write just like an Englishman, or just like a Mormon, so in the sphere he has chosen, he cannot but write from the standpoint of his own mind's belief, of his own convictions, of his own soul's faith.

Before Angelo commenced the fresco of the Sistine chapel, he had been engaged in erecting the mausoleum of Pope Julius II, under the Pope's own orders.

He frequently interrupted, and finally abandoned a long unfinished monument a source of deep regret throughout his life.

The great crowning work of Angelo's life was not commenced until after he had passed his three score and ten.

He was appointed chief architect of St. Peter's church, the grandest piece of architecture in the world.

It was committed to thirteen architects, each one of whom abandoned, as far as possible, the plans of his predecessor.

Angelo sought to escape the responsibility, pleading his extreme age, and the serious difficulties to be encountered in the rivalry and jealousies of other artists.

As the Pope would not be denied, he reluctantly undertook the work, solemnly protesting that he did it alone from a stern sense of duty, and for the glory of God.

He persistently refused all remuneration during the eighteen years he devoted to this labor.

How TO BE HAPPY.—She, in one of his essays, says: "I happened to be passing one day, or rather evening, many years ago, through St. Clement's churchyard, when I became aware of a man who was holding on to the railings of the church, and blubbering in a manner almost to be heard of."

It is reported of a young married couple in Massachusetts, that having quarreled, they separated, and subsequently went to work in the same mill and roomed in the same tenement.

A young lady with a very pretty foot but rather large ankle, went into a Lewisburg shoe store to be measured.
