Will-lams, a well known lawyer of El Paso, sales of 1869 far exceed those of our rivals in while under the influence of liquor, commenced abusing Judge Clarke and Senator Fountain, in a saloon. Senator Fountain happened to step in, and was immediately fired upon by Williams and shot in two places. He will probably die. Judge Clarke ordered the State police, under Captain French, to arrest Williams, who had gone to his house and barricaded it: On a demand to surrender, he refused. The doors wore burst open and firing commenced, Williams selecting Clarke, whom he killed, while so near him as to burn his clothes with the powder. French then shot Williams in the right side, and again in the right eye. Clarke died almost instantly, and Williams within twenty minutes. Newton, Jowa, the express agent up. Newton, Iowa, the express agent unsuspectingly received on his car a box, looking harmless enough, consigned to a distant station. Soon after the train started, the perplexed official noticed several bees issuing from the aforementioned box, and buzzing about the packages and investigating the contents of the car generally. Greatly to his astonishment, the number increased, and presently he himself became the object of their attention. He made a frantic plunge for cover, and at the next station threw the box out on the platform. From this, still more direful mishaps arose. The box breaking in the fall. all the bees were released, and at once made a furious rush for the car windows, to the consternation of the passengers, who very soon felt competent to tell how the busy bee employed his time. The "shining hour" was employed so industriously, that the passengers were fain to flee the stings and arrows of the outrageous fortunes, and flee to a neighboring swamp, and there remain until an ingenious brakeman found some sulphur and smoked the buzzing victors from the cars.—S.
