There is a great delight in watching the development of the different varieties: one can almost imagine he is studying the unfoldings of character. There are ment; the modest beginnings and the abundant fruit; the sourness of one, the delicious sweetness of the other.-I should think that every politician would like to have beds of his rivals and watch their growth. He might learn charity. He will see how much depends on opportunity, after all. The strawberry is the most sensitive of plants. There never yet was a year that was not too hot or too cold for it, too wet or too dry; generally it is both too wat and too dry. The weather, a fickle thing, stands for popular favor. There is abundant disappointment in all occupations, but there is, with all its uncertainty, a peace in strawberry culture which politics takes away but cannot give.
