VISITING FIREMEN A CREDIT TO STATE

With 12,000 men in the city yesterday to participate directly in the big firemen's parade and scores of thousands of other persons here to see the truly wonderful spectacle, all filled with the holiday spirit and in for a good time, it would not have been surprising if some had overstepped the bounds of propriety and the limits of hospitality so liberally extended to them; but it is to the lasting credit of the local firemen, the police and the members of the State Firemen's Association that the order was uniformly excellent during the entire period when the greatest crowd was in the city.

It has been more than 25 years since Harrisburg has had a firemen's convention of anything approaching the dimensions of the present one, and stories had come in advance of the visitors that it had been the experience of other cities which in recent years had entertained the association that the celebrations were marred with scenes of rowdiness and disorder. As a result many Harrisburgers had been led to think women would be subjected to insults if they appeared on the streets and that disgraceful scenes would be enacted generally.

Any stories to that effect were a gross libel on the members of the State Firemen's Association and their friends. The fine appearance and excellent deportment of all the men in the line of march proved to the thousands who took keen delight in the parade, the like of which unquestionably has never before been seen in the state of Pennsylvania, proved conclusively that the state's volunteer firemen are of the highest class of citizenship and an honor to the various towns and cities that they represent.

Even during the hours of relaxation and merry-making, following the long march through the streets of the city, the men deported themselves in a way that reflected only credit on them and their organizations, and the remarkable thing is that during the entire day in which the city was thronged with more than 100,000 visitors it was not necessary for the police to make a single arrest for a serious crime. The credit for this rests no less on the Harrisburg firemen who succeeded in giving the city a clean celebration, than upon their guests who co-operated in refraining from violating the hospitality extended.

No city need hesitate to invite the members of the Pennsylvania State Firemen's Association to be its guests, judging from the high type of manhood the laddies displayed while in Harrisburg.

STATE AID IN SELECTING BEST BOOKS

When new books appear they are heralded in the advertising columns of magazines and everything attractive that can be said about them is said. Then, if they are books such as merit the attention of the worthy critics, they are analyzed in the reading columns, to their advantage or disadvantage as the case may be. Advertisements of new books point out only the good features, however, and of necessity confine themselves to the volumes the publishers are seeking to sell, while criticisms, even though they include comparisons with contemporary literature, give but one man's narrow point of view, with no accompanying guarantee that such a man's judgment is infallible.

The advertising and reading columns of the current magazines manifestly cannot be depended upon to give discriminating readers dependable aid in selecting the best books. The magazines do not openly pretend to do any such thing. Contemporary literature occupies too big a field to be capably judged in its entirety by current periodicals.

Good guesses may be made in the magazines regarding some of the best books of the day, but all the guesses cannot be good ones and all the books cannot be guessed at. The magazine book reviews do not reflect public opinion, because they follow the publication of the books so closely. Their purpose is to mould public opinion, and they measure it only if they succeed in their purpose.

Dependable aid in selecting the best books must come, if it come at all, from groups of experts who pass on contemporary literature after it is no longer green; after public opinion has had opportunity to express itself. If the judgment of these experts has a semi-official nature it carries some weight and must be regarded as somewhat reliable.

Such judgment has been passed by the corps of critics of the New York state library, taking the form of a recently issued bulletin giving the annual estimate of the 250 best books in the English language published in the year 1913. The compilers of the list urge that in following it local librarians make due allowance for local conditions, and do not adhere to it too strictly. They do not intend that their compilation be considered perfect. It is evident, however, that their list is sufficiently close to perfection for the ordinary purposes of librarians and library patrons.

Posterity, of course, passes the final verdict on all books. The judgment of contemporary authorities means something for the time being yet it must ultimately give way to the more certain test of time. Out of the 250 books mentioned favorably in New York's bulletin only a small number will live. Practically all the great books of the ages which to-day throb with life could be included in a list of 250, and a single year's contributions to the numbers of these eternal works cannot amount to a great many. An authoritative compilation of the best books of a year, however, forms a sound basis for posterity's judgment while at the same time giving to present day readers of recent literature aid in selection which is much needed in these times of prolific presses.

And now we turn to the world's series of baseball games for our entertainment.

The weather man kept his promise and gave the fire laddies a fine afternoon for marching.

It is remarkable how many Harrisburgers have important business in Philadelphia this afternoon.

The thirteen world's series ticket scalpers arrested in Philadelphia doubtless are convinced of the ill luck associated with that number.

Chief Marshal Holstein, all of his assistants and all the local firemen and police who contributed to the success of the big parade yesterday are to be congratulated that the pageant was carried out without a hitch and to the entire satisfaction of the visiting smoke-eaters and their thousands of friends in Harrisburg and from other cities.

THE GIRL OF 1914

At a dinner dance, after a maxixe, a 1914 girl's partner, a bespectacled young man, said to her:
"Let us go and walk in the sunken garden."
"I don't want to go into the garden," the girl said shyly, "without a chaperon."
"Oh, we won't need a chaperon, I assure you," said the bespectacled young man.
"Then," said the girl, "I don't want to go into the garden."—Chicago Herald.

THE FARMER'S EXPLANATION

"Every now and then we read about a lot of quail following a hen up the road," said the summer boarder.
"Yes," replied Farmer Cornstossel.
"How do you explain it?"
"Various ways. Sometimes the phenomenon is due to the fact that lots of people don't know the difference between a quail and a young brown Leghorn."—Washington Star.

Tongue-End Topics

New Things in the Parade

Judging from the display of new automobile fire engines brought here from all parts of the State for the big firemen's convention, the days of steam engines and horse-drawn fire apparatus are numbered. It was a great advertisement for the most modern type of fire-fighting machines. Another innovation that was noticeable was the new kinds of uniforms that are being worn by the bandmen. Tastes in this direction run decidedly toward the uniforms of the warring European nations. Especially noticeable was the Russian type of military hats, or toques, similar to those worn by the Czar's Gossacks. One band that had headgear of this type wore tight instead of trousers. This was a decided innovation. This particular group of musicians were well-equipped in physical proportions to look all right in tight. They didn't suggest the skinny man in the bathing suit.

Big Bass Drums in the Band

Charles M. Schwab's Bethlehem Steel Company band, in the development of which the great steel man has spent a great deal of money, solved the question of the best way to carry a big bass drum. It is no easy task to lug one of these instruments over an eight or nine-mile parade route, so the Bethlehemites simply placed the drum on a cart drawn by a well-groomed pony. The biggest bass drum in the whole parade was carried by the Hershey band, from the chocolate town down the Lebanon Valley. Two men besides the drummer helped tote the big thing. The Pennsylvania Steel Company's band was one of the best in line. The famous Ringgold organization, from Reading, played its usual excellent music. But there were so many fine bands in line that it would be an almost endless job to dwell on the merits of all of them.

Wood Will See the Games

George Wood, marshal of the Public Service Commission, never forgets that he was once a professional baseball player and was a member of the All-American team that went around the world in 1889. He likewise never misses the world's series games for the championship, no matter where they are played. "Woodie" is always on hand shaking hands with the other old fans. He has set his heart on going to the games between the Boston and Athletics this week and next week, and this fact came to the knowledge of the members of the commission. The other morning George entered the room where the commission meets, when Commissioner Wallace remarked in a regretful tone:

"It's too bad that we must send Marshal Wood to Pittsburgh on Friday morning to serve subpoenas."

George picked up his ears and his heart sank into his shoes.

"Yes," remarked another member of the commission, "and Marshal Wood had already made preparations to see the world's series games this week and next."

"Woodie" caught his breath and went pale. He was visibly perturbed until Commissioner Brecht could restrain himself no longer and began to laugh. Then it dawned on the marshal that he was being joshed, and he smiled a sickly sort of a smile and said he knew all along he was being joshed. But he didn't look it. He will be in the front row at every game.

Lawyers Who Were Ball Players

One of Harrisburg's best amateur baseball players in the days when the Harrisburg Tri-State first began business and was composed principally of home players, was Charles C. Stroh, who is so much occupied with legal business now that he does not find time to engage in the national pastime. Mr. Stroh will attend the world's series. Near him watching the games will be Charles H. Bergner, another old baseball player who stood behind the bat at Princeton University and was considered one of the best catchers that ever played on the varsity team. Harrisburg is going to be well represented at the final contention for the championship.

Moyer Gets Verdict of $10,400

Lebanon, Oct. 9.—G. H. Moyer, a Palmyra attorney, yesterday won a verdict for $10,400 from George G. Greiner, of Palmyra, for defaulting in an agreement for the sale of the Greiner block in Palmyra, bought for $50,000. The agreement had been made by Greiner with John C. Orr, of Harrisburg, who secured Attorney Moyer as the purchaser, but when it came to the time of Greiner passing title, he is alleged to have refused to comply with a provision of the agreement.

RIFLE PRACTICE SEASON EXTENDED TO NOV. 30

Colonel Patterson Issues an Order for the Extension, So That More Members of the Guard May Have an Opportunity to Qualify

Through the Adjutant General's Department there has been issued by Colonel Frank J. Patterson, inspector of small arms practice in the National Guard of Pennsylvania, an order to the effect that the rifle practice season for 1914 has been extended to November 30, the extent and purpose of which is to permit commanding officers to qualify members of companies in certain

DANDRUFF SURELY DESTROYS THE HAIR

Makes It Dull, Brittle, Lifeless, and Causes It To Fall Out

FREE TRIAL OF SAMOSE

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.
It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.
By morning, most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy, every single sign and trace of it.
You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will be silky, fluffy, lustrous, soft, and look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails. Adv.

cases where the original general order relating to rifle practice had not been complied with. This year bronze and silver medals will be given to those who qualify, and it is especially directed that every officer and enlisted man must fire the indoor or gallery practice course in 1914 before taking up outdoor or range practice.

No scores made in instruction or record practice courses will be accepted unless a total score of 90 or more has previously been made in gallery practice. The extension of the time means that those who failed to qualify heretofore will now be given another chance.

Public Service Commission
The petition of J. M. Laurie for a crossing at grade over the tracks of the New York Central and Hudson river railroad, in Windburne, Clearfield county, was refused by the Public Service Commission, as was the application of the Youghiogheny and Pittsburgh Coal Company for permission to construct a crossing at grade leading to its mines near Van Voorhis, Washington county.

The Commission took testimony in the matter of the complaint of the Borough of Apollo vs. the Apollo Water Works Company. Another hearing on this matter will be held. The complainants allege excessive rates for water for fire protection.

Rescue the Shivering

The Public Service Commission came to the rescue of the shivering citizens of Bangor this morning by handing down an opinion directing the Bangor Steam Heating Company and the Pennsylvania Utility Company to continue to furnish heat to the people of the borough of Bangor. Steam heat had been furnished by the utility corporations for a long period of time and by its own a continuation of the service, residents of Bangor made no other provision for heating their houses and buildings. A few days ago the companies served notice that it was their purpose to shut off the supply of heat, although they were requested not to do so because of the hardships that would result. As a last resort the residents of Bangor applied to the Commission for an order directing the companies to continue the service as heretofore.

Considerable testimony was taken before Commissioner Pennypacker in Philadelphia during the last few days, and last night at 8 o'clock arguments of counsel of both sides were concluded before the Commission at its meeting in the Capitol. After a consideration of the testimony and the arguments the Commission at 10 o'clock this morning issued the order which will compel the heating companies to furnish the service requested.
