THE INVESTMENT ARMY IN WAR-TIME

(Copyright, 1914, by C. M. Keys.)

It happens that the number of stockholders in the big American orporations is greater at this time than it has ever been before in history. According to compilations made by a good authority, the nistory. According to compilations made by a good authority, the principal railways of the country at the present time have nearly 475,000 stockholders, and the principal industrials nearly 800,000, which is almost double the number of three years ago. In other words, there are almost twice as many people enlisted as owners of American corporations as there were in 1911. How has this great mobilized army of capitalists, great and small, met the financial crisis of this summer, and in what temper is it facing the possibilities of the future? ties of the future?

The figures are given below in round numbers for the six largest railways and the six largest industrials that have reported their stock holdings. Where it is possible it is indicated how many of ockholders are women.

Railroads. Total Stoo	kholders	Women.
Pennsylvania	84,000	40,000
Canadian Pacific,	48,000	,,,,,,
Union Pacific	25,000	9,000

United States Steel,	124,000
American Tel. and Tel	54,000	28,000

American Sugar	18,000	10,000

Dullman	12 000

Pullman, 12,000

It will be observed that in the proportion of women stockholders, two industrials, the American Telephone and Telegraph and the American Sugar Company, show the largest percentage. Both are stocks that have been, for many years, supposed to be sound investment securities and that have paid dividends consecutively for a long time. Both also are securities that have been recommended in the past quite widely by New England bankers for conservative investment. A combination of a long continued dividend record and a continued recommendation for conservative people by conservative bankers usually results in increasing the percentage of any stock held by women. Thus the percentage of the stock held in this way in the Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, has been increased year by year, as more and more people have come to regard it as a safe investment security and so far as any stock can be classed in that way.

In spite of the common saying that women are essentially speculative, women do not constitute any large percentage of the stock-holders of the corporations whose stocks are speculations, and the number of women holders of such stocks increase normally only as the investment feature predominates in such issues. The large growth in the list of women stockholders in the New Haven was growth in the list of women stockholders in the New Haven was made during the time when this stock was regarded as an investment and probably it would be found that the percentage of women stockholders has declined since the first reduction in dividends.

One would imagine that with a list of more than a million stockholders owning the stocks of our big industrials and railroads, the markets at a time of great disturbance, uneasiness and uncertainty like the present would lie under a constantly threatening cloud of liquidation. It would be natural to suspect that out of a million people owning these stocks a goodly percentage would be at least asking questions about the market, if they were greatly disturbed and if terror were widespread amongst them. The question, therefore, how this multitude of people is standing the strain resolves itself into an analysis of the volume of stock that seems to be looking for a market. ing for a market.

Curious as it may seem, the efforts of people to find a market at the present time for stocks are exceedingly small. Of course they ask questions, but the usual question is merel: a question as to when the markets are likely to be active again and whether it will be possible in case of necessity to sell a part of their hobdings. There has been little signs of what might be called frightened selling. The American public views the disturbance in Europe as apart from itself, and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and seems to have made up its mind to seem to seem to see the seems to have made up its mind to seem to see the seems to have made up its mind to seem to seems to seem to see from itself, and seems to have made up its mind to sit tight and hold to what it owns sunfil the storm blows over, however long it may last and however severe it may be. The great majority of the holders of these stocks pald more for them than they are now supposed to be worth in the markets and this great majority sees no good reason why it should think of taking losses in securities in which it has faith.

Whether that is a correct attitude of mind or not remains to be Whether that is a correct attitude of mind or not remains to be seen; for certainly the facts seem to favor it and there seems to be good reason to believe that this coutage and constancy in the face of disturbance will prove to be the correct and profitable state of mind under the present circumstances. Underneath this public state of mind with regard to securities there lies a standard argument to the effect that it has been profitable for half a generation to hold good American securities when things seemed unfavorable and to sell them only when prosperity seemed to reach high tide. One will find in the mind of the average American stockholder that this idea. find in the mind of the average American stockholder that this idea is a maxim of investment, and is in fact the guiding principle upon which the American public has bought so extensively and so widely which the American poolic has bought so extensively and so widely into American securities.

In all this comment no attempt has been made to allow for the fact that a good many of the people in the lists are not Americans, but foreign, holders of these stocks. What the actual percentage is it would be impossible to estimate. In the case of some of our is it would be impossible to estimate. In the case of some of our corporations, the figures are known, but such cases are not, by any means, to be taken as illustrating the whole list. In the case of some of our corporations cited above, the American Telephone and Telegraph has about $80 foreign stockholders, American Sugar 71 and the Pennsylvania 12,000. There is no record of the others. It may, of course, be presumed that the majority of the stockholders of the Canadian Pacific are in Canada or in Europe. The number of foreign stockholders of United States Steel is loosely estimated at something over 10 per cent, of the total list. It is probably a safe of foreign stockholders of United States Steel is loosely estimated at something over 10 per cent, of the total list. It is probably a safe assumption that of the purely American companies United States Steel and Pennsylvania have so far the largest percentage of foreign stockholders. This is, however, an assumption and is not proved by actual statistics. To the extent that foreign holdings complicate the situation, it becomes more and more difficult to guess the actual state of miad of this army of stockholders, but competent critics have estimated that even in the case of the foreign holdings only a small percentage of the holders are anxious to sell at present prices, or anywhere near those prices,
