LAD HAD NARROW ESCAPE

Caught in Pump and Beaten Into Unconsciousness

Hagerstown, Oct. 12.—Leonard Hennessy, aged 3 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Hennessy, Williamsport, made a very narrow escape from death Thursday evening while at the farm of J. Harlan Porterfield, where a gasoline engine was operating a pump.

In some way the lad became entangled in the pump jack. He screamed and this attracted Mrs. Porterfield. The little fellow was fastened about the pump and had stopped its operation. Mrs. Porterfield tore off the belt and the lad was carried into the house in an unconscious condition.

Dr. Boose, of Williamsport, was called and an examination showed that no bones were broken and he was not cut. The lad was badly bruised, but will recover.

CITIZENS FLEE IN TERROR FROM CITY

Awful Scenes Enacted at Fall of Antwerp Just Before Germans Enter the City

LAST AND MOST PITIFUL EXODUS

Part of Populace That Had Resolved to Stay in City Abandon Cellars and Retreats and Follow Belgian Army in Flight

London, Oct. 12, 3.03 A. M.—The falling of the government: dated midnight, Thursday, though the burgomaster did not go out to surrender the city until 8 o'clock the next morning and the Germans did not enter until then, a "Morning Post" correspondent in Belgium says. "By midnight Thursday it was clear that further resistance to the attacking German army was vain and the field forces and garrison forces on our side began to be withdrawn to the west side of the river Scheidt. Throughout the night of Thursday the citizens who remained in the city had every prompting to terror. Smoke from burning oil tanks enveloped the city in a dark pall to which the flames of burning houses gave a lining of lurid yellow. Through this pall shrieking shells of 23 centimeter guns crashed like thunderbolts as they sent buildings actually pouring into the streets. Beneath the pall of smoke along the shattered city went hurriedly the ranks of the fleeing army.

Many Had Resolved to Stay "Many of the people of Antwerp had resolved to withstand the bombardment and were content to stay burrowing among the ruins so long as the Germans could be kept out. To them the road of the defending army was the last flow of fate. They abandoned the cellars and retreats and set out in flight. It was the last and most pitiful exodus for those citizens. They passed to the Dutch frontier or toward the quays and some met their death from bombardment.

On Friday morning the bombardment slackened. Seeking the reason I found the headquarters of the Belgian army in the vaults under the central railway station deserted. A railway porter who stood outside stolid and apathetic, told me the soldiers had gone and that the Germans would be there in half an hour. At the Hotel De Ville it was evident that important business was afoot, as officials hurried to and fro with anxious faces. At 8 o'clock the following proclamation dated October 7, was posted announcing will measure the importance the government announcing departure.

Proclamation Announcing Departure "After long hesitation and vain attempts to secure a victory on other fields of battle the German army has pursued for a month now the siege of the fortified position of Antwerp. In these circumstances the government has the duty not only to maintain its communications with all parts of the country not occupied by the enemy, but also to place safe from all risk the liberty of the deliberations and actions and the continuity of its relations with guaranteeing powers and with other nations who accord to our valiant country their sympathies and good wishes.

Sacrificing itself to the imperious obligations of which all patriots are sure to the government perfect transferment has decided to transfer itself to another point of national territory. It quits Antwerp with a grateful memory of generous hospitality and takes pleasure in proclaiming that, faithful to a high national mission, this faithful city has for almost two months assured to the government perfect tranquility in carrying out all public functions.

Will Resist With Obstinacy "After, as before its departure, the army will oppose to the enemy most obstinate resistance. The government has the certainty that the valiant population of Antwerp will in turn support it with stoicism over common trials, with the same sentiment of patriotism as our other cities and more humble villages, and will await with unbroken confidence the approaching hour of deliverance and reparation."

At 8.30 o'clock, Burgomaster De Vos with three of his Sheriffs entered a motor car and went in search of General Von Beseler, German commander in charge of the attack. The burgomaster bore himself with quiet dignity. The burgomaster had hardly left the Hotel De Ville when the bombardment was renewed fiercely. Several shells fell around the municipal offices, wrecking them. In the cellars were all the consular representatives remaining in the city and they were unharmed.

Warning Against Pillage "At 11.30 o'clock the bombardment ceased and shortly afterwards the burgomaster sent a message to his office to post proclamations warning the population against committing any acts of pillage and stating that the burgomaster had taken over the entire government of the city in an endeavor to preserve order. Another proclamation directed the citizens to give up all arms and ordered the police to make a house to house canvass to see that this was done. It warned the population to commit no acts against the Germans. Those fleeing the city were advised to take ample blankets and food. It was announced that the civic authorities would continue at their posts.

At noon a messenger announced at the Hotel De Ville that the Germans were entering by the Malines gate."

He was at a great height, but the aeroplane was not of the usual light brown color and seemed to be painted a cloudy gray, which helped to make it almost indistinguishable.

BIG PIPE ORGAN, 50 YEARS OLD, IS REBUILT FOR SALEM CHURCH

Among the many recent improvements made to the building and furnishings of Reformed Salem church at Third and Chestnut streets, one of the most important, has been the rebuilding of the pipe organ which has been thoroughly reconstructed and brought up-to-date in every particular. This organ was originally built fifty years ago. It had a very sweet tone and gave excellent service for many years, but from constant use during half a cenresearch in that country as well as in Germany and the United States, inspected it critically and pronounced it a remarkable accomplishment. He says the action, which is entirely new, is delightfully responsive to the most delicate touch. He also says one splendid feature is the new swell organ and swell box which is made of the heaviest wood he has ever seen used for the purpose. This makes a great difference in the resonance and carrying quality of the tone, as it is practically impossible for it to crack and produce an unpleasant vibration. Many builders neglect this important requisite on account of the expense of handling and shipping heavy timbers. This new swell box enhances the sweet tone of the old organ which has been retained by using the old pipes.

The organ is now much more accessible on account of the main wind reservoir having been moved into an adjoining room, this giving additional space for the new parts and affording great convenience for the future care of the instrument. A series of large wind trunks connect the various air chambers of the organ with the main reservoir, running under the floor through a 35-inch brick wall to the organ. This required lots of patient and skillful work which was nearly all done by Mr. Buhman himself.

Professor Deceve says only a builder of the rarest skill and ingenuity could successfully carry out such a feat as this. Mr. Buhman has had years of experience in one of the largest factories in the world, acting as one time as overseer. He did a similar piece of splendid work in this city several years ago, which has proven very satisfactory. Indeed he is a versatile genius in organ building, and his work has given so much satisfaction that he is in constant demand, and a church should consider itself fortunate that besides the usual amount of necessities necessary to an organ of this size. The front pipes are of gold finish and the outside case walnut to correspond with the wood-work of the church. Wind is supplied to the organ by means of electricity.

Both the great and small organ speak in a goodly number of actual con- tinues covering the period of an organ of this size. The front pipes are of gold finish and the outside case walnut to correspond with the wood-work of the church. Wind is supplied to the organ by means of electricity.

A number of musicians have called to look over the organ and all express the view that Mr. Buhman has performed an exceptionally difficult piece of work. Professor Edwin J. Deceve, director of the Harrisburg Conservatory of Music, who was born in France, and who has spent much time in musical

"TRAIL HITTERS" TESTIFY

Half a Dozen Meetings in Interest of Stough Evangelistic Campaign Held in This City Half a dozen meetings held yesterday in the interest of the Stough evangelistic campaign were well attended and marked by much enthusiasm. In two of the city church meetings were held for women; men gathered at meetings in the Y. M. C. A. and the Market Street Baptist church, while mixed meetings assembled at the Second Baptist church, Cameron street, in Steelton and Enola.

Two "trail hitters" from Berwick—Joseph McCleary and George A. Laub—addressed the meeting in the Y. M. C. A. and told of their personal experiences covering the period before and subsequent to their conversions. They also spoke at the meetings in the First Baptist church. "Power for Service" was the subject of the address made at the meeting for women in the Market Square Presbyterian church by Miss Colt. Later Miss Colt spoke to a large gathering of women at the Perry Street U. B. church. Mrs. E. A. Reigle, it was announced, will receive the names of the women willing to serve as waitresses at the dinner to be given the men who will aid in the erection of the Stough tabernacle next Saturday. Contributions will be received at the Stough headquarters. "Big Dick" Branton, a former prize fighter from Berwick, spoke at the Second Baptist church.
