troubles of Dingbat and his wife, "The Duchess" with "the family upstairs," may be a trifle exaggerated, but they are, nevertheless, homely troubles and combined with the delightful music and the gorgeous display of femininity should, as a musical comedy, prove a potent attraction at the Majestic Monday matinee and night.

At the Orpheum

Harmony is the charm of this week's bill at the Orpheum. It is provided by the Bison City Four. These artists are just back from the war and they had a pretty hard time getting back, but now that they are in America again they seem to have forgotten their hardships and are singing better and are funnier than ever.

At the Colonial

This should be a day of mirth at the Colonial. Not only because the top-notch vaudeville acts are all of the laugh-producing type, but because two feature films are being shown there to-day that are both declared to be laugh ringers of the first water.

At the Photoplay

It is seldom a film story so vividly portrays the human emotion in all its ramifications as does "Shadows of the Past," a thrilling political narrative of powerful dramatic situations.
