ROBBED SAVINGS BANK OF FORTY-FIVE DOLLARS

Cash Only Was Sought By Robber Who Entered Home of Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy O'Donnell Early Saturday Evening While Folks Were Absent

A thief, whose sole object appeared to be to secure cash, forced an entrance to the home of Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy O'Donnell, 237 North Harrisburg street, Saturday evening while the family was away and abstracted about $45 from a combination savings bank, the contents of which belonged to a young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell.

The thief forced an entrance to the home through a rear window, after which he took the precaution to remove the spring from the front screen door and left the front house door open to enable him to escape if caught in the act.

When the family returned about 11 o'clock that night, they found bureau drawers opened and the contents scattered about the floor. They also found the money bank in the middle sleeping room where it had been carried by the thief from the front sleeping room where it was kept. The safe had been opened with the aid of a screwdriver and a shoe button which were left beside the bank on the bed in the middle room.

Four hundred and seventy-five one-cent pieces which had been left on a window sill near the bank were found intact by Mr. O'Donnell, as was also the family silverware and cut glass.

The matter was reported to the borough authorities yesterday morning but so far the police have no clue.

JURY DISAGREES IN CARMAN CASE

Woman Accused of Mrs. Bailey's Murder Faints Upon Hearing News of Mistrial

ACQUITTAL, 10; CONVICTION, 2

After Thirteen Hours and Fifteen Minutes of Fruitless Wrangling the Twelve Men Reported a Disagreement and Were Discharged

Mineola, L. I., Oct. 26.—The Carman trial struggled to an end at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, when the jury, looking haggard and perturbed after thirteen hours and fifteen minutes of fruitless wrangling, came into the Supreme Court and reported a disagreement. They had been ten for acquittal and two for conviction.

Mrs. Carman will be admitted to $20,000 bail to-day and released to go home a free woman, except for this bond and the psychological bondage which will probably come from the knowledge of a murder indictment hanging over her head.

The present District Attorney of Nassau county, however, says that he will never press the case to a retrial unless new evidence comes to shed light on the mystery and, as it doesn't seem likely that such evidence will be found, Mrs. Carman will probably not face another jury.

Threats in Jury Room

The brightest mark of interest after the case had ended didn't, as a matter of fact, shine over Mrs. Carman or Dr. Carman or any of the leading persons in the trial but over the jurymen, whose deliberations, as it developed, were accompanied by threats of violence.

Along about 7 o'clock yesterday morning, as the gray dawn was competing with the electric lights, one of the ten jurors who had stood firmly for acquittal suggested that the best way to end the controversy would be to cast James H. Aston, who vowed that while there was breath in his body he would not vote for an acquittal, out of the window.

Mr. Aston leaped to his feet and invited his assailant to step forward and try it. At this William G. Hovey, the second man for conviction, pushed his chair back and, hastening to Mr. Aston's side, added his voice to the invitation. No one, however, seemed disposed to execute the threat.

Began With Promise of Verdict

The jury's deliberations began with smiles and auspicious indications of an early decision. Some one suggested that a ballot be taken forthwith, that seeming the simplest way to learn the general impression left by the testimony of both sides, and so a ballot was cast. It showed that nine were for acquittal and that three, Aston, Hovey and Marx Gottsch, were for conviction.

Then an explosion in the pleasant atmosphere which had surrounded the preliminary remarks of all the jurors occurred when Robert Ludlam, the foreman, suggested that it would be more to the point if the jurors for conviction would confine their attention to the testimony instead of making their own inferences. Another ballot was taken and showed that Gottsch had been won over to the acquittal side, while Hovey and Aston remained unshaken.

It was at this point, only fifteen minutes after Justice Kelly had charged the jurors and sent them out, that a loud knock resounded in the court room. The court clerk hastened to the jury door and opened it to find Mr. Ludlam standing at the threshold and explaining in whispers that certain portions of Celia Coleman's testimony were desired.

The opening of the door sent a report flashing through the building that the jury had already reached a decision and wished to report. Mrs. Carman, looking very pale and presenting as pathetic a picture as could be imagined, was brought into the court room from the small ante-chamber to which she had retired with her husband when the jury went out.

The jurors took five ballots in as many hours without further change in their opinions. During this time their arguments grew constantly more acrid and the hope of an eventual agreement faded further as the night progressed.

It was 10.59 o'clock yesterday morning precisely when the jurors, convinced that they could not reach an agreement, filed into the court room and took their seats. Mrs. Carman had appeared nearly half an hour earlier. Dr. Carman, Mrs. Powell and Mrs. Corby were with her. It had been guessed before-hand that the jury had been unable to agree, so some of the edge was taken from the suspense of those who waited.

Tells Judge of Disagreement

There was very little formality about the proceedings. Every one seemed inclined to get through as quickly as possible. As soon as the roll had been called, Mr. Ludlam said:

"We have been unable to agree. We have talked over all the evidence and there is no hope."

"Are you sure, Mr. Ludlam, that you cannot agree?" asked Justice Kelly, who had sat up all night.

"There is no chance, your Honor," replied the foreman. "We talked steadily for eight or nine hours, and after that occasionally, and we haven't had a wink of sleep."

"I am in the same boat with you there, gentlemen," said Justice Kelly, smiling.

"But we have been arguing," put in the foreman.

Mr. Graham, counsel for Mrs. Carman, then suggested that the jurors be asked if it was the evidence that they could not agree upon. The question was put, with the remark from Justice Kelly that he might be able to straighten out some point of difference.

"It isn't a question of evidence, your Honor," spoke up juror No. 9, who was Joseph Molineaux. "We have gone over it all very carefully and cannot reach a verdict."

"I am very sorry, gentlemen, that you cannot agree," said the justice. "You have been here for a week and I am not inclined to hold you longer. I will discharge you."

With that, Justice Kelly rose and the twelve jurors, putting on their hats, proceeded to depart.

Mrs. Carman had begun to cry before all of the jurors were in their seats. She kept a handkerchief constantly to her eyes during all that followed until Justice Kelly had risen. Then Mr. Graham, putting his arms on the back of her chair, said: "I am very sorry."

Mrs. Carman Faints

She managed to bear up while she was still in the court room, but on reaching the anteroom outside fainted. A doctor was called. Dr. Guy Cleghorn, who attended her in the jail, said that her nerves were completely shattered and that she was broken-hearted. While she was in jail, he said, she was crying continually.

The first juror to reach the Court House steps was Mr. Ludlam. A couple of hundred persons gathered around him in a few minutes and he made a little speech about the jurors' deliberations. As others came out, some one offered to give three cheers for the men who had voted for acquittal, but the proposal didn't meet with very great enthusiasm and the cheers were not given.

There seemed to be a fairly well defined opinion among the crowds around the Court House, however, that everything had turned out for the best.

William Bailey, the murdered woman's husband, said that he was satisfied, and Mrs. Jennie Duryea, Mrs. Bailey's mother, expressed the family's sentiments in these words:

"I feel that it is a moral conviction and that is all that I care for in the eyes of the world. I didn't want Mrs. Carman to go to the electric chair nor yet to prison, but I do not see how they could vote for an acquittal on the evidence."

Mrs. Duryea, who is an aged woman, concluded her remarks to newspaper men by saying that she wouldn't want Mrs. Carman to suffer as she had.

WILHELM PRAISES KUNKEL

Prominent Lawyer and Bull Moose Leader Enthusiastically Endorses Dauphin Jurist

(Special to the Star-Independent)

Pottsville, Pa., Oct. 26.—William Wilhelm, prominent lawyer and politician, is out far-footed in support of George Kunkel, President Judge of Dauphin county, for the State Supreme Court. Mr. Wilhelm's statement has particular significance because he himself was one of the candidates for nomination for Judge of the Supreme Court at the primary elections last May.

Mr. Wilhelm is one of the Washington party leaders of the State, being one of the original men in the Progressive movement two years ago, being elected president of the Progressive League of Pennsylvania and being assigned to high committee places in the councils of the Washington party. Mr. Wilhelm says he is in favor of Judge Kunkel's elevation to the highest court of the State because of the record for absolute fairness which that jurist has made upon the Dauphin county bench, where he has sat for eleven years.

"There are many reasons why I am going to vote for Judge Kunkel," said Mr. Wilhelm. "It is well understood that nine-tenths of all Pennsylvanians were convinced that Judge Kunkel fearlessly performed his whole duty in the Capital graft cases; but what has appealed and does appeal to me even more than his faithful work in those cases is his consistent fairness in passing upon the nomination papers that came before him in 1910 and 1912."

In this connection Mr. Wilhelm recalled the battles of the Keystone party in 1910 and the Washington party in 1912, each of which led to numerous contests in the Dauphin county court over the right to use party appellations.

"My activities in both those years," he continued, "and close personal contact with the leaders who were in opposition to the Republican party gave me, in connection with them, a chance to weigh carefully Judge Kunkel in his official work. He convinced me, and convinced nearly every one I had occasion to speak with about him, that he was doing his duty and had no thought of favoring the then dominant party, of which he was a member."
