HUTCHISON GAVE TIP LEADING TO ARREST OF HOHL IN LAST APRIL

in the Huntingdon reformatory, where he was sent for larceny and burglary from Harrisburg.

The Home of the Ormsby Girl
The Altoona police department located the home of the Ivy Ormsby on the outskirts of Salem, O., and through the girl's father, who is a honest farmer, Hohl's arrest was made. The father promised Chief Tillard, who personally interviewed him at his home, that he would do all in his power to aid in Hohl's arrest, and early on Sunday morning, April 4, Hohl and the Ormsby girl appeared at the latter's home.

Hohl wanted to send a telegram out of Salem and one of the girl's brothers accompanied him to the railway station. While he was there word was sent to the Chief of Police of Salem, who stood inside the station door, and when Hohl appeared the chief pushed two revolvers against Hohl and thus was the arrest of the bandit accomplished.

Hohl announced that he would return to Altoona without extradition papers, believing that he could make his getaway on route, and this he tried to do in Pittsburgh. Inspector Turney was taking him back. In the Pittsburgh station restaurant Turney took off the handcuffs to permit the prisoner to eat and Hohl, taking advantage of that, threw a cup of coffee in the inspector's face and made a dash for the door, but he was collared by a waiter.

Escapes Holidaysburg Jail
Hohl made a great play in Altoona, confessing to the robbery and permitted himself to be "mugged." He was committed to the Blair county jail in Holidaysburg when he made a sensational escape on April 12. Hohl removed his clothing and slipped through a window eight feet above the floor of the cell after greasing the bars with soap and butter.

The opening through which Hohl escaped was slightly more than seven inches wide and eighteen inches long. He drew himself to the roof from the cell window and then lowered himself to the ground by means of a rope made from the covering of the cell mattress. He then scribbled a derisive note on the office door of the prosecuting attorney and disappeared.

It was also from Harrisburg that word of the direction he took in fleeing from Holidaysburg was obtained by the Altoona authorities. Hohl wrote a letter from Gallitzin to Harrisburg, so former City Detective Jack Welsh so informed the police. This tip, however, did not lead to any further arrest.

Took Ormsby Girl From Salem
Hohl's next escapade was his appearance in Salem, O., in a big automobile in which he took away the Ormsby girl from under the nose of the Salem police. In the meantime a robbery in Kansas City, similar to the Union bank robbery in Altoona, was laid to Hohl and his name was associated with the robbery of the Homestead bank, on August 17, in which the thief escaped with $9,000. With the police authorities of four cities after him he went to Cincinnati and pulled off two more daring robberies yesterday and there his career was ended by the bullets of the police.

Hohl's accomplice in the Homestead looting was alleged to be a man by the name of Kauffman, who is now under arrest there. There is a question as to who the Cincinnati accomplice was. The Harrisburg police, who have had every possible route to Hohl's relatives "covered" since the robbery, are aiding the Cincinnati police in trying to get back the stolen $13,100.

Tried to Shoot Detective Welsh
Hohl's early life, the police say, was that of a young gangster and his actions were those of a "Wild West" man. He was a member of two gangs, the first being the "Tin Can Alley" gang. After a succession of clothing store robberies, City Detective Welsh, Sergeant Wiles and Patrolman Steimer surrounded a house at 658 Sayford street and made an arrest of a number of youths, of whom Hohl was one. Hohl was cornered at the top of a stairway and when Detective Welsh was going up the steps Hohl leveled a revolver at him and pulled the trigger, but no explosion followed. He was arrested later on the roof of that dwelling.

On January 10, 1906, Hohl was sent to the Huntingdon reformatory for burglary and larceny and was later released on parole. He was next associated with a gang of river pirates. Hohl and some associates, operating a motorboat in the river, were caught robbing freight cars at Lemoyne. Their plunder was buried on an island in the river. The railroad police, aided by the Harrisburg police department, arrested Hohl, and Judge Sadler, in Cumberland county court, sentenced him to from one to four years in the Eastern penitentiary. That was on November 11, 1909.

After serving a year, Hohl was paroled and he came back to Harrisburg and worked as a mechanic for the Ford Motor Sales Company. The police were tolerant and did not send him back to the penitentiary, although time after time, they say, he was found disobeying the State automobile laws. When an automobile was stripped of its tires an certain fixtures Hohl was taken to police headquarters, but he would not confess to the theft.

The next morning when City Detective Murnane and County Detective Walters went to the garage to arrest Hohl on that charge he had disappeared in a Ford car belonging to Dr. W. P. Evans, of Middletown. He sent a postcard to City Detective Bach from Baltimore telling him where he could find the machine, and the Baltimore police found it there. That was the last heard of Hohl until he committed the Altoona bank robbery.

Hohl's was a short career, but one

MOTHER SAYS HOHL WAS A GOOD BOY BUT THAT POLICE HOUNDED HIM

escaped from that jail on Easter morning. I never saw him afterwards."

"Mother Says He Was a Good Boy"
Here the mother love came out again. "He was a good boy," she said in a low voice as she wiped her handkerchief, "and he was always doing some kind act when he was a little boy. He shared with his boy companions. And they say I wrote to Bertha in Cincinnati, saying I had seen Frank last week."

"I hope if she has a letter of that kind that she will show it, and it will not be my handwriting. No, indeed, I have not seen him. I wish I could have seen him just once more before they killed him. The last time I saw him he came to the dock here in an automobile and said: 'Mother, good-bye. They got me again, and I must go,' and that was the last I saw of him."

"Oh, how they hounded my boy," wailed the mother; "they could never let him alone after he got out of the Huntingdon reformatory. Once when he had a good place at the railroad yards, his boss took sick, and when the new boss took charge he sent my boy off because he had been in Huntingdon. Then he got a place in Bethlehem, but he lost that when the men were laid off, and then he went to Williamsport. He wrote me to come and live with him, and said he wanted me around the house just so he could see his mother's face," and the voice was broken with emotion.

Says Son Was Hounded
"They say that Frank was here to see me, but that is not true. It was my son-in-law who was to see me, from Uniontown. He has an automobile, and he came to bring me a present. I have three daughters, two of them married, and one in a school in Philadelphia, and they were all good children,—good to me,—but Frank was my only boy, and oh, how he loved his mother," and the little woman's voice was choked with sobs as she stopped to wipe the tears away.

"My husband was a railroad brakeman until he lost both legs in a railroad accident, and then he was a lamp-stander at the Union Station, and he was a good husband, and strict with the children. For fourteen years I have been a car cleaner at the Union Station. It is not true that Frank sent me money. He never had any. Why, when he robbed that bank in Altoona he was down and out. He said to me: 'Mother, I had had nothing to eat for three days and I was hungry, and he was lying sick in her room, and he was on the bank and saw the money, and on the impulse of the moment I went in and shot it up and robbed it. I was desperate.' He was not a bad boy at heart," said the mother, making excuse for the wayward one, "and if they had let him alone and not hounded him he would be here with me. But now he is dead, and that is the end."

Hohl Befriended Street Dogs
"If I can get a pass," continued the mother, "I will bring my boy back home to bury him. That all I can do now. I want to show that I believed in him, for I know that if he had been given a chance he would have been a different man. But they hounded him,—they hounded him,—and at the memory of what she considered her son's wrongs there was a light in the mother's eyes that never looked in the face.

"They say he was a 'wild' man," said the woman, "but that was no. No boy can be kind to animals and be a cruel man, and he was continually bringing stray, forlorn-looking cats and dogs to the house to feed them, so that his father threatened to punish him if he did not stop it. No boy who does that can be cruel.
