POLLUTION OF THE GREAT LAKES BECOMING MENACE

Dr. Blue Shows Over 16,000,000 Passengers Are Carried Over Waters Each Year by More Than 1,600 Vessels

By Associated Press.

Washington, Dec. 19.—Pollution of the Great Lakes and tributary rivers, is becoming a serious menace to health, according to the report yesterday of Surgeon General Roger Blue, of the Public Health Service. He points out that about 16,000,000 passengers are carried each year over the Great Lakes and that more than 1,600 vessels use these waters.

Dr. Blue declares, "that these inland vessels play an important role in the maintenance of the high typhoid fever rate in the United States." The danger of pollution of the Great Lakes and rivers, contributing thereto is becoming a serious question. These large bodies of water are constantly becoming more polluted, thus lessening their value as a source of water supply.

Practically all of these vessels secure the water used aboard for all purposes by pumping from the lake. It is recommended that water so taken be purified before used for drinking purposes.

Dr. Blue details the work of the medical officers under him for the year in eradicating plague, investigating tuberculosis, in making special inquiries into epidemics of typhoid fever and other diseases.

Public health officers who examined conditions relative to the effect on persons who come in contact with migratory consumptives found little reason to believe that such contact has proved injurious. He points out again that investigation by American officials does not bear out the claims made by Dr. F. F. Friedman for a specific for tuberculosis. Investigation of the Von Ruck treatment, is inconclusive.

Speaking of typhoid Dr. Blue says that although its prevalence in the country is being gradually reduced and the rate is not more than one-half of what it was thirty years ago, it is still higher than for some other advanced countries. The urgent need at present is for rural sanitation. Most American cities show an appreciation of the way to deal with typhoid.

Study of the use of drugs in this country, where anti-narcotic legislation has made statistics available, Dr. Blue says, leads to the belief that the estimate of drug users has been high and that the users of morphine and opium in this country probably do not number more than 140,000 while the number of cocaine users is probably "very much lower."

LATE WAR NEWS SUMMARY

tested regions of Flanders. Like the rumored capture of Westende, however, this report lacks official confirmation. About all that is known definitely of the situation in the west is that the allies are exerting steady pressure at the German line and, while advancing in some locations, have suffered reverses elsewhere.

It is announced in Athens that 100 men, including several German officers, lost their lives when the Turkish battleship Messudieh was sunk by a British submarine. A previous official statement from Constantinople stated that the crew had been saved.

England is preparing to express its gratitude for the help to war sufferers extended by the United States by cabling a message of thanks at Christmas time.

It is indicated by the German War Office statement to-day that the offensive in the west now rests with the allies. The Berlin communication speaks of a series of hostile attacks, which it says were repulsed. The French statement, however, asserts that further important advantages have been won by the allies, who apparently are now making an effort to push back the German line at the sharp angle north of Paris where it swings eastward.

At Albert it is said that the allies under a heavy fire pushed through to the entrenchments in front of the second line of outposts. At several other points, according to the French War Office, ground has been won and German trenches have been occupied. In the two instances it is admitted that the Germans have made progress.

HOHL ATTEMPTED TO LOOT THIRD CINCINNATI BANK

drawers. In all the robber got $8,000, protected by insurance.

Manager Fired Four Shots In a corner of the room the two girls crouched fearfully. William Winter, a bartender, came in and the bandit waved him out with the pistol. Former Police Lieutenant Edward Rockwell heard Winter's alarm given to the patrons.

The robber fled through the doorway leading to the corridor. He ran toward the front door. The manager, revolver in hand, was right after him and fired four shots at the fugitive.

Outside there was an automobile in waiting, a two-seated runabout. The engine was running. The bandit jumped into it, and as the witnesses gazed in wide-eyed wonder he sped away. The automobile had been stolen from B. H. Elliott, 5647 Bramble avenue.

Next the Liberty Bank, at Liberty street and Freeman avenue, was robbed by this criminal of criminals. Turning on the "high" he sent the runabout up Freeman avenue after the first job, and in a few minutes sauntered into the institution. As another might produce a bank book, he aimed his revolver at George Winters, of Mooney avenue, Hyde Park, the cashier. Using the marble slab of the paying window as a stepping stone he succeeded in getting over the seven-and-a-half foot metal railing. The bandit must not have liked Winters' looks, for he fired three shots, several striking the cashier in the face, cutting slight flesh wounds and inflicting powder burns. A bullet shattered a lamp globe. Hohl compelled Winters to assist him to cram money $5,100 into the satchel, already well filled. Four thousand dollars more in bills was later found in front of the bank. Apparently the money had been hidden in the satchel being overfull, and had dropped the currency.

Planned Third Robbery "Keep your mouth shut, kid, or I'll shoot you," said the man to Ethel Holterbach, 11, of 1726 Freeman avenue, who was the only other person in the bank. Ethel was too frightened to move, and fell to the floor when the fellow began to shoot. She had been making a deposit for her mother.

Following this robbery the thief had no trouble in getting away. The Mohawk German bank, Fifteenth street and Central avenue, was the object of his third call.

That the lawbreaker was supernaturally cunning was demonstrated by his actions at the Mohawk bank. The manager, William Cross, of 3119 Jefferson avenue, was alone, and reading an evening edition of the Provincial when he was on the lookout for the land pirate's craft. As the runabout drew up to the building, Cross picked up a telephone to notify the police. Cross was talking with detective headquarters when the much-wanted individual walked up to the counter and heard the manager's conversation concerning him. Cross saw the suspicious black eyes of the man figuratively pinned upon him. It was an uncomfortable situation.

City-Wide Search Inaugurated "There is no chance to use the phone, I suppose," inquired Hohl. The bandit had Cross at his mercy and he knew it. It was a cat and a mouse game.

"None whatsoever," came the reply. "Good," the visitor replied, and darted out. Cross watched him climb into the machine and go down the street at a fast clip.

For nearly two hours, while detectives, police and bolder private citizens peered around frantically for the uncrowned king of terror, he drove calmly along. Once he stopped and bought a newspaper and read an account of his misadventure. He had passed at least a score of policemen.

Now the scene shifts to the rooming house of Mrs. Ida Buckhorn, at 918 West Ninth street, just a square from the location of the first bank robbery. When he had given the entire profits of his hour's work to an accomplice, who is yet unknown to the police, Hohl went to the machine to Mrs. Buckhorn's place, where he had engaged a room on Tuesday, and walked in his room as though nothing had happened.

Homer Buckhorn, 18 years old, is the landlady's son, and he read in the newspaper descriptions that the burglar wore rubber-soled shoes. The youth notified the police.

The police surrounded the dwelling. Patrolman Knaul entered. He went up to Hohl's room, on the second floor, not anticipating resistance. As Knaul opened the door of the bandit's apartment the robber stepped toward him, an automatic revolver in each hand, and began to shoot. Knaul was one of the game members of the force, but he could not withstand the leaden inferno poured at him, and Hohl retreated downstairs, bleeding freely.

Faced Hall of Bullets The bandit came down stairs after Knaul and it is thought to have shot the patrolman after he knew Knaul was seriously wounded. Brushing past the officer the desperado, seeing the other officers and fearing them not, sought the street. Knaul, fast nearing unconsciousness, braced himself against the front door and fired at the robber, who answered the shot.

There was still a smile on the bandit's countenance as he advanced down the front steps outside the house into the hail of bullets from the policemen's guns. He leaped to the pavement and ran to Freeman avenue.

The police were after him instantly. He got a good lead and disappeared around the southwest corner of Richmond street and Freeman avenue. At Richmond and Fillmore streets the trusted automobile was in waiting. He cranked it up and left his pursuers behind. While in flight the bandit occasionally turned to fire at the police. Again it was thought that the bandit had escaped.

Great was the surprise of the blue-coats when, hardly a moment later a small, covered auto appeared at the west side of Ninth and Freeman avenue. In it was the bandit. He had gone around the short square bounded on the east and west by Freeman avenue and Carr street and was headed for the spot where Patrolman Knaul lay.

On Ninth street, between Freeman and Carr, the bandit's machine had struck a telephone pole, due to his poor driving. With the utter dare-devilism that characterized his entire day's adventure, he was returning to repeat his battle with the law, if necessary.

The auto was running on three wheels at full speed. One wheel had been shattered by the encounter with the pole.

Patrolman Chase took an advantageous position and began shooting at the rear of the vehicle. The bandit pumped bullets back at him. With his left hand the robber guided the car.

Crossing Freeman avenue, which is granite paved, the machine swerved. An instant later it crashed into the curb. From a nearby engine house rushed out and found Patrolman Chase flourishing his revolver and Hohl lying in the bottom of the machine. The dying bandit was carried into the engine house. He was conscious, yet he would not speak. The newspaper with the blood-spattered story of his crime carnival was in the auto. When they went to him first his right hand still clutched the revolver and the left hand maintained its tight grip on the steering wheel.

Two cleanly driven bullet holes were in the singlass of the back curtain of the car. Another tiny opening was in a side curtain. The seat of the vehicle was drenched in Hohl's blood.

The Harrisburg Polyclinic Dispensary will be open daily except Sunday at 3 p. m. at its new location, Front and Harris streets, for the free treatment of the worthy poor.

BOYS LEAD POLICE TO PLACE OF HIDDEN GOLD

Patrolmen Hiram Michaels, of Lancaster, and Adam Souillard, of Royalton. At the close of the preliminary hearing and immediately subsequent to the Squire's decision to hold the youthful offenders for court, the boys insisted upon telling how "funny" it is to rob and then fool the police. The police quote Dasher as saying:

"I felt real good when Souillard passed me several times after we had cracked that car and did not speak to me. The last time I saw him before we were pinched he did not speak and I thought he was not wise; but then when he found those empty sweet potato crates, which we hid in a drain pipe, I though the jig was up."

The police say that at one at a time the boys told how they rifled the clothes of several foreigners while the aliens were in bathing in the Susquehanna river below Royalton. Last summer they stole Italian gold money, hid some of the coins beneath a rock along the Susquehanna river shore and gave the rest to a younger lad to "play with."

Tell of Other Thefts Late yesterday afternoon the offenders accompanied the police to the place where seven gold coins were hidden, chopped away the ice and surrendered the money to their captors.

In another story the police declare the boys admitted stealing a watch, money and a pair of shoes from two farmer boys, one by the name of Kinsey and the other Metzger. This robbery also was committed while the victims were in bathing.

The three boys are said also to have confessed to robbing a Middletown clothing store and to stealing two calves from John Horwitz, a Middletown butcher.

The mother of the Seibert boys, as well as other relatives of the trio, testified against the defendants. Mrs. Seibert saying the lads brought the loot to the Seibert home and admitted to her that "we just cracked a car."

WOMAN SMOKER BURNS TO DEATH

all the clothing had been burned from her body and nothing remained but her shoes. She was terribly burned and she suffered intense agony throughout the night and until her death early this morning.

A physician called in shortly after the fire had been extinguished said the woman could not live and added that her condition would not permit her being removed to the Carlisle Hospital. In her desperate effort to put out the fire, the old lady fell on the bed, setting fire to the bed clothing and the carpet.

Three fire companies responded to an alarm sent from the almshouse but the inmates at the home had beaten out the blaze by the time the firemen arrived. The loss to the building and furnishings is trifling.

Mrs. Kimmons, so far as could be learned by county officials, was a widow with no surviving children. She had been an inmate at the home about one year.

Rules at the almshouse will not permit the inmates to smoke in their bedrooms, and it was the fear of being excluded from the home and thrown upon her own resources as a penalty for violating that rule, which caused the woman to delay in summoning aid.

Mrs. Kimmons formerly was a resident of Humsdale, Cumberland county. The body will be sent there for burial.
