Foot Pads for Housekeepers

Tired, aching feet are responsible to many irritating actions and sharp words. The pity of this is that it might all be avoided with a little thought, but the housewife gives little attention to her house shoes or to her floors except to see that both are neat looking.

Rubber heels should be put on all shoes and foot pads should be placed before the ironing board, the stove and work tables, or wherever you stand. If you have an aching back or head these simple things will give quick relief.

An old comfort or quilt makes a splendid pad. It should be about two feet square and an inch and a half thick. Tack firmly and cover with burlaps. This not only prevents one tiring from standing but keepes the feet ware.

thick. Tack firmly and cover with burlaps. This not only prevents one tiring from standing but keeps the feet warm. Scrubbing, happily, has gone out of fashion, but there are times when one must work on bended knees and then a pad like the one described above is a convenience. The knee pad may be thicked and not so large as the foot pad and its under side snould be covered with oil cloth.

There is another pad that one can make at home for use when polishing hard wood floors or waxed articles. It is made from a block of wood about the size of a brick, hollowed out so, it can be grasped at the top. A scrub brush worn smooth does nicely. Cover with many thicknesses of cloth and lastly a thick piece of leather outside. Keep

HINDU EGG DANCE

Curious and Difficult Feat Performed Alleges She Contracted Lead Poison-by Girl Jugglers ing at Type Cases

Curious and Difficult Feat Performed by Girl Jugglers

Of the many wonderful feats performed by Hindu jugglers one of the most remarkable is the egg dance. Usually it is executed by a girl fantastically dressed. She makes use of a willow wheel, around which at equal distances are threads, and at the end of each thread there is a noose held open by a bead.

This wheel the girl places on her head, while she carries a basket of eggs on her arm. When the music strikes up she begins to dance, and the wheel begins to spin around. She then takes an egg from the basket, places it in one of the thread nooses and throws it from her with sufficient force to draw the knot tight. The spinning of the wheel keeps the thread stretched with the egg at the end of it.

She then takes another egg from the basket, places it in another noose and repeats this until there is an egg in a printing plant.

She then takes another egg from the basket, places it in another noose and repeats this until there is an egg in every noose. Her fantastic costume, her perfect motion and all the eggs swinging on stretched threads at once present a curious sight.

It requires much art to execute the dance, for one false step would cause the eggs to be dashed together and the dancer to be disgraced.

After dancing for some time with all the eggs swinging round her head she takes them out of the noose one by one, all the time keeping the wheel balanced and in motion, and again places them in the basket on her arm.

After the performance the spectators are allowed to examine the eggs to see that they are real.—London Ideas.

—a magnificent figure of a man. It was the Grand Duke, now commander-inchief of the armies of Russia, was born the year after the Crimean War and was 58 last October. But he still radiates an impression of easy power and strength. His grandfather was the son of that Czar Nikolas I, whose physique was famous in Europe. When a mob gathered in the Sadovaya, in those early days, a story is still current of how the great Czar drove to the seene, got out of his carriage, and strode out alone, gigantic and threatening, and with a single mighty roar produced a stunned silence through which he lectured the huddled crowd like a stern but just father and sent them away, tamed. His great-grandson inherits much of his physical power. Although the military career of the Grand Duke Nikolas has attracted little attention outside of Russia, largely because he has concentrated whole-heartedly on each phase as he met it, his prosent supreme command is nevertheless the logical result of a consistent rise through all ranks, not because, but almost in spite of, his imperial blood.—Basil Miles, in the January "World's Work." "Then you will not blow up the postoffice to-night?" "No," I replied, "not to-night."

"You have really and truly aroused my curiosity. Tell me, what does the ten of hearts mean to you?"

I gazed thoughtfully down at her. Had I truly mystifed her? There was some doubt in my mind.

"Frankly, I wish I might tell you. All I am at liberty to say is that I am about to set forth upon a desperate adventure, and I shall be very fortunate if I do not spend the night in the

I hesitated a moment. "What would cu say if I told you that this adventure was merely to prove to myself what a consummate ass the average man can be upon occasions?"

Why go to the trouble of proving it?"-drolly. "I am conceited enough to have some doubts as to the degree."

"Consider it positive. I laughed. "I am in hopes that I am neither a positive ass nor a superlative one, only comparative.

"But the adventure; that is the thing that mainly interests me." Oh, that is a secret which I should hesitate to tell even to the Sphinx. "I see you are determined not to filluminate the darkness,"—and she turned carelessly toward her uncle, who was serenely contemplating the glowing end of a fat perfecto.

I bowed and passed out into Sixth avenue, rather regretting that I had not the pleasure of the charming young person's acquaintance.

The ten-spot of hearts seemed to have startled her for some reason. I wondered why.

The snow blew about me, whirled, and swirled, and stung. Oddly enough recalled the paragraph relative to Mrs. Hyphen-Bonds. By this time she was being very well tossed about in mid-ocean. As the old order of yarnspinners used to say, little did I dream what was in store for me, or the influence the magic name of Hyphen-Bonds was to have upon my destiny.

Bismillah! (Whatever that means!)

CHAPTER II.

After half an hour's wandering about I stumbled across a curio-shop, a weird, dim and dusty, musty old curio-shop, with stuffed peacocks hanging from the ceiling, and skulls and bronzes and marbles, paintings tarnished jewelry and ancient armor, rare books of vellum, small arms, tapestry, pastimes, plaster masks, and musical instruments. I recalled to mind the shop of the dealer in antiquities in Balzac's La Peau de Chagrin, and glanced about (not without er) for the fatal ass's skin. (I that I was wearing it myself that night!) I was something of a collector of antiquities, of the inanimate kind, and for a time I became lost in speculation—specular liked to er agreeable of its kind. I liked to er agreeable of its kind. I liked to conjure up in fancy the various scenes through which these curiosi ties had drifted in their descent to this demi-pawnshop; the brave men and beautiful women, the clangor of tocsins, the haze of battles, the glitter of ball rooms, epochs and ages. What romances lay behind you satin slip-per? What grande dame had smiled behind that ivory fan? What meant that tarnished silver mask?

The old French proprietor was evidently all things from a pawnbroker to an art collector; for most of the lewelry was in excellent order a hot, penetrating glance.

"The ten of hearts!" he exclaimed, in amazement.

It laughed easily.

"The ten of hearts!" he repeated.

"Yes; four hearts on one side and four on the other, and two in the middle, which make ten in all."

From the shining metal of the small arms, my glance traveled to the face of the prospective buyer. It was an interesting face, clean-cut, beardless, energetic, but the mouth impressed me as being rather hard. Doubtless he feit the magnetism of my scrutiny, for he suddenly looked around. "There are several reasons,"—briefly. around. The expression on his face was not one to induce me to throw my arms around his neck and de clare I should be glad to make his acquaintance. It was a scowl. He was in evening dress, and I could see that he knew very well how to wear it. All this was but momentary. He took up a revolver and balanced it on his palm.
