Made in America

The present unpleasantness abroad is giving us opportunity to become better acquainted with American made goods. One article that has suffered long from ungrounded prejudice is American saiad oil. This is made from cotton seed and answers all purposes that olive oil is used for. It has not the strops; edor or distinctive flavor that marks the Italian oil, and this should make it most popular. The most important thing, however, is its lower price.

"Cotton seed oil or salad oil is sas should make it most popular. The most important thing, however, is its lower price.

"Cotton seed oil or salad oil is as nutritions as any oil and on account of its mildress and ability to absorb flavors is preferred by many," says a government report. Not only will we save money by learning to use this home product but we will benefit the southern cotton grower who is suffering so severely by the war.

The cotton question is still looming large on the public horizon. Almost all women who could, bought at least one cotton purchase on "Cotton day," and merchants say they feel good effects from the movement even now. But the good work will not stop here for the discovery of delightful new fabries in this material has made the addition of more than one new cotton frock seem a necessity. There is cotton corderoy, and cotton broche, so tempting in velvety softness that no mere woman can resist having a skirt or a bolero from one or the other. resist having a skirt or a bolero from one or the other.

"Yes. And for the past few min-utes, since I heard of the robbery, I've been thinking how I could get out of here upon the slightest notice." While the reckless spirit was upon me, I produced the fatal card and showed the back to her. "You will and that yours is of a different color. But I am not the Galloping Dick; it was only a hare-brained lark on my part, and I had no idea it would turn out serious like this. I was going to disappear before they unmasked. CHAPTER IV.

In other words, we had departed the scene of festivities none too soon. I could readily understand why the door had been locked; it was not to keep us in the cellars; rather it was to prevent any one from leaving the ball room by that route. Evidently our absence had not been noticed. nor had any seen our precipitate flight. I sighed gratefully.

For several minutes we stood silent and motionless on the landing. At length I boldly struck a match. The first thing that greeted my blinded gaze was the welcome vision of a lit-tle shelf lined with steward's candles. One of these I lighted, and two others I stuffed into the pocket of my Ca-puchin's gown. Then we tiptoed softly down the stairs, the girl tugging fearfully at my sleeve.

There was an earthly smell. It was damp and cold. Miles and miles away (so it seemed) the pale moonshine filtered through a cobwebbed window. It was ghostly; but so far as I was concerned, I was honestly enjoying myself, strange as this statement may seem. Here was I, setting forth upon an adventure with the handsomest, wittiest girl I had ever laid eyes upon. If I extricated her neatly, she would always be in my debt; and the thought of this was mighty pleasant to conof this was mighty pleasant to con-'Do you know the way out?"

"But I do not want you to die; I want you to get me out of this cellar; and quickly, too."

"I'll live or die in the attempt!" "I see nothing funny in our predicament,"—icily.
"A few moments ago you said that our angles of vision were not the same; I begin to believe it. As for me, I think it's simply immense to find myself in the same boat with 'My dear young lady, on the word of a gentleman, I will do the best I can to get you out of this cellar. If I have jested a little, it was only in the effort to give you courage; for I haven't the slightest idea how we are going to get out of this dismal hole.

We went on. We couldn't see half a dozen feet in front of us. The gloom beyond the dozen feet was Stygian and menacing. And the great grim shadows that crept behind us as we gretted so much as the fact that I proceeded! Once the girl stumbled and fell against me. and fell against me.
