jestic theatre for one performance on Friday evening. January 15, of Miss Ethel Barrymore, since it marks the return of this ever popular artist in a new play, one in which it is promised she has been supplied with opportunities, for the display of her splendid powers at their best. Miss Barrymore's present vehicle is entitled "The Shadow" and is from the pens of Dario Niccodemi and Michael Morton. The latter is recalled as the author of "The Yellow Ticket" and numerous earlier successes, while Mr. Niccodemi owes his fame to several successes he has written for Madame Rejane. In fact, "The Shadow," under the title of "L'Ombre," was written by Niccodemi for that French actress, but secured its first production on this side of the water owing to the intolerable war conditions in Paris. The English translation was made by Mr. Morton. Charles Frohman has surrounded Miss Barrymore with a distinguished company. Bruce McRae, recalled for his association with Miss Barrymore in "Sunday," "Lady Frederick," "Cousin Kate" and others of her notable successes, essays the leading male role. Remaining roles are in the hands of Grace Elliston, Ernest Lawford, Edward Fielding, Amy Veness and Vera Pole.
