Address 1. 0. Box 114. Ingness of the people to submit to the necessary restrictions. Indiana and Michigan are cited as instances of the importance in this respect of public opinion. In Michigan the first herd was slaughtered on October 19. Cases of the disease existed in fifteen Michigan counties and in eight een in Indiana. In all 330 herds were affected Sixty days later these herds dat all been slaughtered and the infect ed premises cleaned and freed from disease. In the interval thore had been only a few scattering instances, half a dozen possibly, of the plague spreading from these different centers of infection to neighboring farms. The people not only observed the diaches in which the animals were to be buried dug and waiting for the killing gangs. As a rule no objection was taken to the appraiser's valuation of the condemned stock, which is the more surprising in view of the fact that so dittle was generally known of the seriousness of the disease. The farmers di not want to part with their stock. They saw that the sore mouths and feet grew better and they had had ne experimene with the after effects of the pestilence—the constant aborting, the failure to produce milk, the ability to disseminate disease months after the visible symptoms had disappeared. Nevertheless they accepted the situation, helping instead of hindering. In only a very few cases was there any attempt to conceal the existence of the disease, in fact public opinion was so strongly against this that it was practically impossible to do so. In one instance a man fed some skim milk from a creamery to a calf which later de-veloped foot and mouth disease. It oc-curred to him to kill the calf and say mothing about the matter. The neigh-bors, however, obtained some inkling of the facts and notified the authorities. After he had been forced to admit that he had killed the calf the body was dug up and unmistakable marks of the disease found upon it. Within two weeks all the rest of the herd was in-fected and had to be killed.
