Australian Scientist to Lecture Here

Reserved seats for the lecture to be delivered Tuesday evening in the Majestic by Sir Douglas Mawson, the noted Australian scientist and Antarctic explorer, were placed on sale this morning at 9 o'clock at the box office when the special tickets were exchanged.

The Australian who was the scientist with the Sir Ernest Shackleton party that made its memorable dash for the Pole was selected by the Australian government as being the most competent man to make the exploration trip.

One of his big jobs was to superintend the construction of a series of wireless stations from his native land to the great barriers around the Pole in order to keep the people at home properly and accurately informed as to the weather and ocean current conditions.

His return after months of untold hardship will be thrillingly illustrated with some really remarkable stereopticon and moving pictures.
