Look out for his makeup. He hasn't augular eyebrows or pointed mustache, does he wear a red suit.

A Gentlemanly Devil.

The devit as a devil never tempted . You couldn't tempt a man to by showing him a wretched home, rags, bloated face, diseased body. but by gilded surroundings and exhibaration of a pleasant stimulant. He comes in the guise of a friendly strangso cultured, so faultless in manner. daylight he is seldow out of good comone door, he puts on a different cont and comes in at another. He will laugh and lie like the devil. He tells a young fellow that he can "drink or let it alone." He tells a girl that flirts with a stranger that she's quick and can offivir any one. He's a good deal more watchful at a dance than the chaperon. He tells a bus ness man adopting tricky methods that he needn't fear; he's still "legal honest." He comes so insidiously that we can scarcely distinguish him from our mental opera. tinguish him from our mental operatinguish him from our mental operations. He is up to date. The twentieth century devit may be a mean, demorrilging, debitiating habit of doubting; a sneering, scotting mood; a cynical spirit which derides the virtue it
