Salmon

Canned salmon is one dependable article of food and often the hostess remember, with a sigh of satisfaction, that there is a can of it waiting for an expected emergency on her canned goods shelf. It is delightful served as a fish salad and then only needs to be mixed with mayonnaise and daintily garnished to be ready for the chance luncheon guest.

But the fish is so good that it really deserves more attention than this for it never fails to come up to the cook's best anticipations.

One way to serve it is to spice it in this way: Remove contents from a can and crush all the bones and remove any bits of skin. The bones should not be removed for they are pure lime and we get too little an amount of lime in our foods to waste a bit. The skin is removed because it is dark colored and spoils the appearance of the dish. Spice enough vinegar to cover the salmon and heat it until it is almost boiling. Pour this over the fish and set it aside to steam and cool, but cover it well. This should stand for twenty-four hours. It is the richest of all speeded fish.

Another splendid way to utilize canned salmon is to make it into fish cakes or croquettes. Add half as much mashed potato as you have salmon and season with salt and pepper and chopped parsley. Bind with the yolk of an egg beaten only slightly. Shape into flat cakes or croquettes and cover with fine crumbs. Set the prepared croquettes in the refrigerator for several hours and when ready to fry them, roll them once more in crumbs. Either put them in a wire basket and lower them into deep fat or brown them in butter in a pan. Another way to brown them is to brush them over with frying oil or butter and place them in a hot oven until they are brown. Some persons think they cannot eat fried food and so use this oven method of browning croquettes. It is not a good way, for it dries the articles, but it is more wholesome than frying in a little quantity of fat.

Immersing any breaded article in enough very hot fat browns the entire surface immediately. This coating prevents any fat penetrating through the crumbs, so that foods fried in deep fat are never greasy.

Salmon loaf is a familiar dish on most tables and those who do not know how it is made are always anxious to find out. Here is the recipe: One can salmon, pepper to season, two table-spoons melted butter and one and a half cups of rolled cracker crumbs. Mix the yolks of two eggs and one cup of milk with this or use one whole egg and half a cup of milk. Bake in a well buttered mold, twenty-five minutes.

PEG O' MY HEART

"No. I don't think it's jealousy," said Ethel slowly.

"Then what is it?"

"Disgust!" She shrugged her shoulders contemptuously. "Now I understand why the scullery is sometimes the rival of the drawing room. The love of change!"

He turned away from her. Ethel watched him quietly.

"Chris, come here!"

He turned to her.

"There! It's all over! I suppose I have been a little hard on you." She held out her hand.

"My nerves have been rather severely tried this past month," Ethel went on. "Put a mongrel into a kennel of thoroughbreds and they will either destroy the intruder or be in a continual condition of unsettled, irritated intolerance. That is exactly my condition."

Brent sat beside her and said softly: "Then I've come in time?"

Ethel smiled.

"So did I, didn't I?" and she indicated the window through which Peg ran after assailing Brent.

"Don't! Please don't!" he pleaded.

"Very well," replied Ethel complacently. "I won't."

"I'm sorry, Chris," remarked Ethel finally, after some moments had passed. "A month ago it wouldn't have mattered so much. Just now—it does. It's been horrible here."

"A month of misery for me, too," replied Brent passionately.

"I'm going away—out of it. Tomorrow!" he added. "To Petersburg—Moscow—Siberia!"

"Oh, the cold places!" She paused, then asked, "Going alone?" He whispered almost into her ear:

"Unless some one goes with me! Will you go?" And he waited breathlessly.

"She thought a moment, looked at him again and said quietly, "Chris, I wish I'd been here when you called—instead of that—brat."

I've engaged for her resigned? Not one stays more than a week. Can I tell him that?"

"You could, mater, dear, but would it be wise?"

A moment later Peg entered with Michael cradled in her arms. She had

"Let us be honest with each other, Ethel," said Peg.

a roguish look of triumph in her eyes. Down the front of her charming new dress were the marks of Michael's muddy paws. Peg was also breathing quickly and evidently more than a little excited.

"Take that animal out of the room!" cried Mrs. Chichester indignantly the moment Peg appeared.

Peg turned and walked straight out into the garden and began playing with Michael on the grass.

Mrs. Chichester waited for a few moments, then called out to her, "Margaret!" then more sharply, "Margaret, come here! Do you hear me?"

Peg went on playing with Michael and just answered, "I hear ye."

"Come here at once!"

"Can Michael come in, too?" came from the garden.

"You come in and leave that brute outside!"

"If Michael can't come in I don't want to," obstinately insisted Peg.

"Do as I tell you. Come here!" commanded her aunt.

Peg tied Michael to one of the French windows and then went slowly into the room and stood facing her aunt.

"Look at your dress!" suddenly cried Mrs. Chichester as she caught sight of the marks of Michael's playfulness.

"Michael did that. Sure they'll come off."

Mrs. Chichester looked at the flushed face of the young girl, at the mass of curly hair that had been carefully dressed by Bennett for dinner and was now hovering around her eyes unduly. The old lady straightened it.

"Can you not keep your hair out of your eyes? What do you think will become of you?"

"I hope to go to heaven, like all good people," said Peg.

Mrs. Chichester turned away with a gesture of despair.

"What is it?" continued the old lady.

"I say what is it?"

"What is what?" asked Peg.

"Is it that you don't wish to improve? Is it that?"

"I'll tell you what I think it is," began Peg helpfully, as if anxious to reach some satisfactory explanation. "I think there's a little devil in me lying there, an' every now an' again he jumps out."

"A devil?" cried Mrs. Chichester, horrified.

"Yes, aunt," said Peg demurely.

"How dare you use such a word to me?"

"I didn't. I used it about meself. I don't know whether you have a devil in ye or not. I think I have."

Mrs. Chichester silenced her with a gesture:

"Tomorrow I am to give Mr. Hawkes my first report on you."

Peg laughed suddenly and then checked herself quickly.

"And why did you do that?" asked her aunt severely.

"I had a picture of what ye're goin' to tell him."

"Why do you constantly disobey me?" pursued the old lady.

"I suppose it is the original sin in me," replied Peg thoughtfully.

"What?" cried Mrs. Chichester, again taken completely aback.

"Oh, I say, you know! That's good! Ha!" And Alaric laughed heartily. Peg joined in and laughed heartily with him. Alaric immediately stopped.

Ethel took absolutely no notice of any one.

Peg sat down beside her aunt and explained to her: "Whenever I did anything willful or disturbing as a child me father always said it was the 'original sin' in me an' that I wasn't to be punished for it because I couldn't help it."

VAINLY HIDES IN MINES

Alleged Confederate Counterfeiter Leads Unique Chase

Seranton, Pa., Feb. 10.—After being trailed through seven miles of underground mine workings, Alexander Tesh, 30 years of age, of East Drinker street, Dunmore, was arrested by Federal authorities yesterday and remanded to jail to await a hearing on a charge of passing two Confederate bills on Dunmore business men. At his boarding place several more of the bills were found, all of them evidently fresh from the press.

In the arrest of Tesh, the authorities think they have run down the first of a number of agents of a Southern syndicate, which is sending the bills into this section of the country in the hope of passing them off for legitimate United States currency.

The bills were of the issue of 1862, and are of the $50 denomination. Stephen Rossenowicz, a merchant, and John Stankevitz, a hotel man, both of Dunmore, made the complaints.

Load of a Camel

A camel is never relieved of its load from the beginning of the journey to its end. It eats, walks and sleeps under its burden, often for weeks at a time. The training of a camel is no easy matter, as it takes about three years to teach it to bend its knees in order to be loaded and unloaded.

You Don't Need a Black Cigar

THE taste that craves heavy tobacco is storing up trouble for its owner—and needlessly, too. Beware!

If you must have an all Havana smoke, try and get next to the fact that a smoke to be rich and satisfying doesn't have to be made on heavy Havana. MOJA ALL HAVANA quality will fully satisfy any taste, mild or strong.

Moja 10c Cigars
