Foreign Decorations

The various decorations that have been given to American officers and officials by foreign governments are deposited in the State Department, where the recipients may see them and show them to their friends, but may not take them away or use them as having possession.

To the man of firm purpose all men and things are servile.—Goethe.

The Great Experiences

It is impossible to overstate the authority, the overwhelming validity, of the great experiences of life. Death, love, birth, work, creative effort, pain—above all, pain—each adds something definite, precious, enduring to the soul's stock of treasure. These are the things that shall not be taken away. They are the bricks we build into the house of life. They are the foundation stones of our eternal city.—Cornelia A. P. Comer in Atlantic Monthly.

A PASTORAL PLAYHOUSE

Wonderful Open Air Theatre in the Heart of the Alps

What is probably the most perfect pastoral theatre in Europe is situated in the heart of the Alps—at Interlaken, Switzerland. This unique "playhouse" is open to all the winds that blow, and its roof is formed—in the most favorable circumstances—by the blue canopy of the sky. It is not always thus, however, and it has not infrequently happened that the hue of the canopy has been less inviting and that players and spectators alike have experienced the interlude of a heavy downpour which was not in the program.

The open air theatre at Interlaken is used for performances of Schiller's great drama, "William Tell," for which it is by nature admirably adapted. The stage is a rising meadow framed on three sides by dense woods of green and pine, with a "backcloth" of grim, gray rock towering toward the sky beyond. Away to the right stretches a huge semicircle of mountain peaks, 9,000 and 10,000 feet high, and behind the spectator tower the great peaks of the Bernese Oberland—the Jungfrau, Monch and Eiger, with their burden of eternal snows.

Nature in accommodating mood has provided the entrance and exits of this unique theatre—passages in the woods through which gallop with thundering hoofs on hard ground the mail clad troopers of the tyrannical governor. The cattle, goats and sheep which appear in the first scene—the return of the flocks and herds from the Alpine pastures—approach down the steep path in the woods on the right and are heard long before they are visible, the tinkling and clanging of their bells mingling harmoniously with the low drawn notes of the huge wooden Alpine horn, seven feet in length, and forming an appropriate overture.—Wide World Magazine.

The Word "Bajah"

Literally the word rajah means king, and maharajah the great king or ruler
