COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

A Descriptive Handbook Has Been Issued by the Department of Commerce

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—The Department of Commerce has issued a pamphlet entitled "United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Description of its Work, Methods and Organization."

While this work is intended for the general reader it also gives a concise account of the more important scientific features of the work of the Survey and of improvements that have been made in recent years in instruments to hydrography there is a description of the wire drag, an apparatus so valuable in discovering hidden dangers that escape detection by the ordinary method of sounding.

In the section relating to tides is a brief description of the improved tide-predicting machine which with one operator predicts the tides for one year in advance for any port, and does the work of 100 men. To set the machine for any station and tabulate the tides for a year for any port takes not more than 12 hours.

In the article on base lines there is a description of the modern method of measurement with tapes of invar metal now used in the Survey to the exclusion of any other method. The invar metal is an alloy of nickel and steel, the advantage of which for this rate of expansion and contraction under changes of temperature is about 1-25 that of steel, so that the important source of error due to temperature changes is practically eliminated.

The use of tapes has decreased the cost of base measurement by about 35 per cent, and greatly increased the rapidity of the work.

Under the head of astronomy is a description of the Talbot method of observing latitudes by means of which results of superior accuracy are attained. This method has long been used by the Survey in precise determinations. The instruments used in the determination of longitude by the telegraphic method are also described.

The use of a motor truck for the transportation of parties engaged in latitude work is mentioned as having increased the rapidity and decreased the cost of such work by a large per cent.

There are numerous illustrations of instruments and apparatus, parties at work in the field, etc., and maps showing the extent and character of the work.

When the survey was begun under Ferdinand B. Hassler the entire coast of the United States was on the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico. The acquisition of California, Oregon and Washington, and later of Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, greatly extended the scope of the Survey and brought new problems to be solved.

The extension of the triangulation into the interior so as to form a geodetic connection between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts; the extension of this system so as to furnish accurately located geographic positions and elevations in all parts of the United States; and the beginning of a systematic magnetic survey of the whole country are among the important works that have been undertaken since the original plan of Hassler was adopted.

The results of the operations of this Bureau are of importance to the navigator, the surveyor, the engineer, and to all who are interested in works of public improvement requiring accurate surveys as their basis.

The publication may be obtained without charge from the Division of Publications, Department of Commerce.
