DANGER SIGNALS.

Red is Used Because it is the Most Effective Color. Red is the color universally used as a danger signal because it can be seer farther than any other color. It is also the color that "attracts attention, excites curiosity and arouses to action," as William Churchill said in an ad-dress before the Illuminating Engineering society.

Green, the complementary of red. is the color of which nature makes lavish use, and therefore a green signal is less easily recognized than a red. beuse, and therefore a green signal is less easily recognized than a red. because the former may easily be taken for a part of the background, while the latter always contrasts vividly with the background. So green has been used for a clear or a cautionary signal. At night especially red is used as a danger signal, red lanterns being placed on torn up streets and obstructions, red tail lights being used for motorcars, red lamps to indicate fire exits in cars, red lamps to indicate fire exits in theaters, factories and hotels and more recently to mark dangerous parts of machinery, high current wires and other danger spots.

In Mr. Churchill's address, as quoted by the Scientific American, he gave the effective range of the several col-ored lights recognized by the Railway Signal association under ordinar weather conditions, as follows: Red, three to three and one-half miles; yellow, one to one and one-half miles green, two and one-half to three miles; blue, one-half to three-quarters of a mile; purple, one-half to three-quarters of a mile; lunar white, two to two and Red, no matter how distant, never ceases to look red. This is not true of any other color, though a good green fairly approximates it.

Yellow light is visible much farther can be distinguished and is easily mistaken for a "neighborhood light"—that in a house, for instance. Lunar white-a pale bluish white has come into use as a "clear" indica-tion for switches on many railroads.

It can be recognized at greater dis-tances than yellow and is not so easily mistaken for "neighborhood lights." HYPNOTIZING ANIMALS.

Even the Deadly Cobra May Be Made

Hypnotizing a hen is a trick known to most country boys. It is an old ex-periment, first described by the Jesuit father, Athanasius Kircher, who laid a hen on the table, held it firmly for a little while and drew a chalk line in front of its eyes, with the result that it remained as if in a catalepsy. In India it is known that a cobr caught by the neck and gently pressed will soon become stiff and remain so for a considerable time either coiled up or out straight. suddenly upside down goes into a trance. Other animals are susceptible to this treatment, some more quickly than others.

If you pick up a crab and wave it in the air it becomes immobile, a female bending her legs over her abdomen, a male sticking them out almost straight.

gestion or physical inhibition, in ani-mals by mechanical inhibition, but in both cases sensory stimuli may assist. These stimuli may be optic (fixing the gaze on some object), or tactile (stroking the skin), or otherwise. Some-times an absence of wonted stimuli may induce the state, as in the case of absolute silence.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

"We may be justly proud of what has been achieved, but let us not fail to remember with Newton that 'the vast ocean of truth' still 'lies' for the most part 'undiscovered before us.' However marked may be the progress of science, her individual votaries must always feel a sense of humility at the little the best of them is able to con-tribute toward the general result."— Sir Edward Schaefer, in an address to the British association.

OLD ENGLISH HOUSES.

In the Days of Wooden Huts, Thatched Roofs and Clay Floo

The habitations of English co people for centuries consisted of a wooden but of one room, with the fire built in the center. To this hut, if a man increased in family and wealth, a lean-to was added and later another and another. The roofs were of thath, the beds of loose straw or straw beds lean-to was added and later another and another. The roofs were of thatch, the beds of loose straw or straw beds with bolsters of the same laid on the floor or perhaps eventually shut in by a shelf and ledge like the berths of a ship or by a small closet.

The Saxon thane or knight built a more pretentious "hall," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great frees of dry wood, whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By day the "hearthsmen" and visitors, when not working or fighting, ast on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "ealmly drinked and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on treestes, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale-with fish and milk or meat and ale.

At night straw or rushes spread on the floor formed beds for the entire company in the earlier and ruder days, when the "baser sort" were glad to share their straw with the cows.—National Measures.
