JAPANESE BAIT DIGGERS.

As Many Women as Men Work at the Disease Breeding Trade. An extraordinary occupation that many of the very poor follow in Japan is that of the esatori, or bait catcher, who spends his days gathering angleworms. We say "his," continues the account in the Japan Magazine, but the bait diggers are as often women as men. The Japanese angleworm is not occidental countries, but from the black mud of the rivers and capals. ing. The city has numerous streams and canals connected with tidewater, and as soon as the tide begins to ebb you can see women with their baskets and their mud forks climbing down the stone facings of the canals, plunging their legs into the deep mud and picking up the wriggling red angle-worms that they dig out of the mud. These worms are a somewhat different species from the earthworm. They are slightly stouter, with jointed bod-ies and peculiar mustached mouths. The receptacles for the captured worms are baskets or tubs with covers that contain small square openings throug which the women drop the worms they pick them up. As soon as the batt baskets or tubs are full the wo-men take them to the shop and sell them. The batt shop deals in batt only, and from these establishments the fishermen buy worms for their hooks.

The amount that the angleworm catchers can make daily is very small, not more than 40 sen for each worker, but it helps out in the household expenses. In the summer weather the work is not hard, although it is certainly hot, with the sun beating down on the stooping form and reflected on the stooping form and re from the wet mud and water. In the colder weather, however, it is more trying, for the batt catcher has to stand for hours in the freezing mud.

Diseases that are the result of their calling are frequent among the ball women, especially beriberi and dropsy The Japanese regard bait digging a the most miserable way of getting living known to mortal man,
