NATURE'S PART IN SCHOOL TRAINING

There was a day, and not a very remote day ther, when educators considered merely the intelctual values of a school curriculum and failed to ke into their calculations the environment of the pil. It did not occur to them that the schoolom and the school-yard should be made attracte. Happily those days are past, yet some localis are far ahead of others in the beautifying of ool-grounds and school-premises.

Yet much perhaps might e understand that the Civic Club, aside the beautifying of the back yards of s summer and offering prizes as an inr this work, also is wishing to do what ld to the attractiveness of the Fresh rounds. Harrisburg will welcome corendeavors in this direction. It is work eded and work that tells in the long run can be estimated.

nature, they will probably never gain it at all, and they will miss from their education something vital and something which they have a right to claim from those in authority.

school stories—so charming in fact because they were all drawn from actual life—can forget the zeal with which her pupils from the slums tended the flowers in the school windows; how eagerly they vied with each other for the privilege of looking after them, how wild with delight they were over each new bud and blossom.

The marvel of "green things growing" is a perpetual, never-ending delight, While our opportunities here may be comparatively limited, let Harrisburg follow so far as she can, the example of other cities, and beautify her school premises so that they be a source of civic pride, and an inspiration and aid in the forming of character.

CAUSES OF INCREASED DESERTIONS

A Baltimore judge, who has had some experience No reader of Myra Kelly's charming, realistic

A Baltimore judge, who has had some experience with desertion and non-support cases, attributes the increasing number of such cases principally to brief courtships. The encouragement of hasty marriages at present in European countries, so that an abundant rising generation may quickly replace a diminished one, is a measure of war and can hardly be recommended for times of peace. Impatience in marriage surely accomplishes much of the harm that the courts are called upon to remedy.

This reason for desertion is a very common one however, and too general. It is a pre-marriage reason. More immediate causes need to be given, and these have been furnished by the National Desertion Bureau. They are: A husband's affection for another woman, his desire to shake off all domestic worriments, or his tendency to carry on family quarrels.

There is satisfaction in noting that the Desertion Bureau in addition to expressing more or less valuable opinions concerning unhappy marriages, has done much in a practical way to remedy conditions. It has in the past year located the majority of the deserters it has gone after, has reconciled the most repentant ones and has imprisoned the most unreasonable ones. The causes of desertion are not that accompanied them, given by indicate ways for making suitable adjustments of his talk he mentioned the fact that one affairs of unhappily married couples.

REPLY FROM MR. MAURER

The following letter was received yesterday by the editor of the Star-Independent: Editor, Star-Independent.

Editor, Star-Independent.

Dear Sir: Your editorial in last evening's paper, on the bill introduced by me for a Graduated Income Tax, is somewhat amusing.

You lead us to infer that you regard the welfare of the State as dependent on its capitalists and wealthy folk and that we should all move cautiously and "speak very easy." lest they (the capitalists) take up their kits and leave us, To me, this would seem to be the happiest of circumstances. As a Pennsylvanian, with a native pedigree of some generations, I do not think that the workers would suffer much through the loss of the "masters," whom they now pay so handsomely. As long as we have our mountains and valleys, our coal and other greath wealth and an energetic working-class to plough and harrow and sow, dig and delve and weave and fashion, we can very well spare the kind of people whom you regard of great industrial consequence and I regard as mere flotsam on our social pool.

With thousands of workers all around us, idle and suffering, with great accumulations of wealth in the hands of the second of the regard of the product of the Red Cross service getting there is a special pool.

Social pool.

With thousands of workers all around us, idle and suffering, with great accumulations of wealth in the hands of non-workers, it is possible that the day predicted by Macauley is within reasonable distance, when the Huns and Vandals generated among us will rise and destroy our nation. We are aiming to prevent this. We asked that two millions of State money be devoted to public employment to give, at least, a part of the idle a chance to get through the panic without hunger. But, no! Our State has millions for Constabulary, but not a cent to relieve the hardships of its impoverished workers.

So, friend, don't lament, even though the capitalists do be forced to go. You and I have courage and ingenuity enough to get along without them. And please don't accuse me of insincerity of act in presenting the Income Tax bill. Never was more sincere in my life. If there be anything connected with the bill that I regret, it is that it has been made to pander somewhat to "upper-class" prejudice, by fixing the maximum income at ten instead of at two thousand dollars.

If it don't pass this session, there's a good time a comment

Such a withdrawal of a $500,000 industry from Pennsylvania would mean the throwing of a large number of Pennsylvania workmen out of jobs and would make the present conditions of unemployment, which Mr. Maurer most commendably seeks to improve, only that much more serious.

We are entirely in sympathy with Mr. Maurer's ambition to help the unemployed of the state, but we cannot see how this income tax plan would serve to accomplish that end.

The peace talk was not convincing enough to halt the rise in Bethlehem Steel stock.

Real Pictures of the War One of the most interesting series of pictures of battle scenes of the war now progressing in Europe has been or exhibition all week at the Majestic Theatre, and large crowds have seen the They were taken by some of the staff artists of a Philadelphia news paper who are on duty in the war zone thing that have thus far been seen in Harrisburg. When it is said that of the corps of photographers engaged in field hospitals. These dogs are highly taking these pictures four have lost intelligent and are trained to do just their lives, the difficulty and danger of what was seen in the picture. War is the work is apparent. A photographer to have taken some of those pictures must necessarily have been right on the firing line, close up among the men at the guns, and as the enemy is no respecter of persons their liability to get shot was just as great as that of the men actually participating in the fighting. None the less interesting than the pictures was the intelligent description a good deal of the front at Petersburg that accompanied them, given by a in the winter of 1864-5." And a good of the films on exhibition had been smuggled through the German lines in the sole of the photographer's shoe, which goes to show how difficult it is to get by the censors. He also said that some of the photographers had taken pictures which they knew teers for the Red Cross service getting their uniforms before going to the field, and the change from civil life to work on the field was wonderful. Most of these recruits were young men, full of life and activity, and they seemed

Both had perished in the same fight, and on the top of the crosses over their graves were placed the helmets they wore in the fight as they fell.

Patriotism of the Germans

The program for the Nielsen-Ganz recital in Chestnut street auditorium on Monday evening was announced to day. It embraces a wide range of vocal and instrumental selections and, in addition, Miss Nielsen will sing as encores some of the old-time heart-throb songs, for which she is noted. "Annie Laurie," "Kathleen Mayourneen," "The Last Rose of Summer" and some of her songs beloved by the owners of alking machines are to be included. The program follows:

Variations on a Theme by Bach (Weinen-Klagen), Liszt, Mr. Ganz; (a) "The Day Is Done," Spross, (b) "The Weathercock." Lehmann, (c) "But Lately in Dance," Arensky, (d) "Love Has Wings," Rogers, Miss Nielsen; (a) "Thece Ettades," (b) 'Noceturne in F Sharp Major," (c) "Waltz gians going into action, horses on the maintenance of self and family, which his position imposes on him; as, for instance, a United States ambassador abroad who must provide elaborate quarters for entertaining, etc. If Mr. Maurer could devise a practicable plan to limit SALARIES to that amount it might be a good thing.

But SALARY by no means constitutes all of a man's income in all cases. A man might have $500,000 invested in an industry in Pennsylvanía from which his income, at 5-per cent., would be $25,000 a year, exclusive of any salary consideration. If a law, such as Mr. Maurer proposes, were enacted in this state, this man would be required to pay $15,000 of this $25,000 income back to the state, and whether or not this would be just to him it is a content of the form. Thousands of civilians, men, women and children, marched through the streets with the troops to give them a good send-off, and the picture was one of the best in the series. The famous marching "goose-step" of the German seople was seen in a remarkable picture taken in Berlin when some men were about the centrain for the front. Thousands of civilians, men, women and children, marched through the streets with the troops to give them a good send-off, and the picture was one of the best in the series. The famous marching "goose-step" of the German soldiers was shown in a review of a corps by Emperor William, evoking much laughter. sad sight, and yet not tended for sadness, was the departure of a German regiment for the front. The great majority of the regiment were very young men, hardly over twenty, and some looked younger. History says that the Civil war in this country was fought by the soldiers between the ages of eighteen and twenty-three, and it seemed as if history is repeating it-self in Germany, But, it was a sad sight, nevertheless, although there was not one of the young Germans but was laughing and cheering as if it were a great thing to be going to the firing line.
