marines have demonstrated that side armor and impenetrable turrets are of very small account when the bottom of a ship can be so easily pierced. The problem of protecting the bot-tom may look insoluble, but it can-not look more hopeless than the protec-tion of the sides did fifty or sixty years ago. The idea of getting enough ar-mor upon the sides of a snip to afford substantial protection looked impos-sible to naval architects of two genera-tions ago. But bold inventors and constructors trued the experiment, and it succeeded successive improvements in the quality of the plates were effected. The next step was to attack the decks of war vessels by vertical fire, and the constructors introduced pro-tective decks. Then the mine and the torpedo were perfected, and the sub-marine vessel was invented, and now the problem is to protect war vessels below the water line. It may or it may not be possible to do this, but the experiment will be made, and it is as l.kely to succeed as some of the earlier experiments. Of course, bottom arnor would add great-made, and it is as likely to succeed as some of the earlier experiments. Of course, bottom armor would add great-ly to the weight of a vessel, but the displacement can be increased enough to give the necessary buoyancy. Besides, it may be worth while to take off some of the turtet and side armor to save weight. Of course, the stability of the ship would be in-creased if the heaviest plates were be-low the water line instead of above. The sides of a vessel is not present a very large target, and the protection of the bottom may be important enough to justify a reduction in the protection of the sides. When the maxel architects found it mecessary to increase the thickness of the side armor they reduced the area to be protected to the vitals of a ship, the engine room and the principal bat-tery. The tow and stern could be shift of the ship intact, with the motive pow-er and the biggest guns. This principle may be carried still farther. Still less protection may be given the sides and top of the "ita-del," in order to give more to the bot-tom, which can be attacked by an in-visible enemy. The turrets are very heavy and, being placed high above the water, they are where they have the water, they are where they have the stability. At the distances at which vessels uscally fight now the platforms of the

At the distances at which vessels At the distances at which vessels usually fight now the platforms of the big guns present a very minute target; the chances of their being hit is small. For the sake of protecting the bottom it may be worth while to replace the massive turrets with light shields de-signed only to protect the gun crews from small, rapid-fire guns and frag-ments of shells, and put the weight where it will resist torpedoes and mines.

It may be that no bottom will stand It may be that no bottom will stand the explosion of a mine or a torpedo, but the next departure in battleship construction will test this. The effi-cacy of the submarine has been demon-strated, and the present task of naval constructors is to devise protection

Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and en-tirely greaseless), is much better than soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair. Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly.
