SENATE AND HOUSE PAGES PLAY BASEBALL GAME

Former Claim Game by Score of 9 to 7, While Lower House Pages Claim Victory, 8 to 7—Read It and Take Your Choice

Take your pick. The Senate and House pages played a game of baseball on Island Park yesterday afternoon. There were no sporting writers on hand, so after the game the House pages gave out the information that the House pages won by the score of 8 to 7, and then the Senate pages gave out the story that the Senate pages won by the score of 9 to 7. Tonight somebody will be using the "short and ugly," but who knows who will be using it rightly?

The Senate, pages said Representative Hackett, of the House, umpired the game and the House pages said Hackett was on the mound for the Senate when Powers, of the House team, knocked out his home run and that Representative Walsh and Graham, of Philadelphia, umpired the contest. "Hop" Grissinger pitched splendid ball, according to his teammates from the lower house. The Senate pages are not so good sporting writers as the House pages, for the latter framed a box score for nine innings, while it is said that the game only went six innings. Well, here is the score:
