VANDERBILT DIED A HERO: GAVE LIFE BELT TO WOMAN

London, May 10.—Thomas Slidell, of New York, who was interviewed in London yesterday, said he saw Alfred G. Vanderbilt on the deck of the Lusitania as the vessel was going down. Mr. Vanderbilt, who could not swim, was equipped with a life belt, but he gallantly took it off, Mr. Slidell said, and placed it around the body of a young woman. Then he went off to seek another life belt. The ship sank a few seconds later.

Mr. Slidell said that he and Herbert Stone, of New York, were sitting in the smoking room by themselves when the first torpedo struck the ship. Both men intuitively knew what had happened and they simultaneously uttered the word "torpedo." Together they left the room and went on deck, which already had acutely tilted. Mr. Stone made for the upper side of the deck, while Mr. Slidell moved downward. This was the last that Mr. Slidell saw of Mr. Stone. Subsequently he asked a number of survivors, but could not find any one who had seen Mr. Stone thereafter.

GIRL OF 14 PROVES TO BE HEROINE OF LUSITANIA

Queenstown, May 10.—The brief time elapsing between the torpedoing and sinking of the Lusitania was long enough to develop a heroine in Miss Kathleen Kaye, 14 years old, returning from New York, where she had been visiting relatives.

With smiling words of reassurance, she aided stewards in filling a boat with women and children. When all were in she climbed aboard the lifeboat as coolly as an able seaman.

One sailor fainted at his oar, the result of a hard race to escape swamping. The girl took his place and rowed until the boat was out of danger. None among the survivors bears a little sign of her terrible experiences as Miss Kaye, who spends most of her time comforting and assisting her sisters in misfortune.

FIREPROOF STORAGE

Harrisburg Storage Company's Big Building Notable for Size and Modern Construction

Among the recent improvements in real estate in this city—the large building erected by the Harrisburg Storage Company, on South Second street, is notable for size and substantial construction. It also has many advantages from an architectural standpoint that makes it a modern plant for storage in every respect. The offices and warehouses practically occupy two eight-story buildings with basements, having a total floor area of 70,490 square feet. These buildings are close together and are connected with convenient passageways, which virtually makes them one. They were built especially for the purposes to which they are devoted, and were planned and constructed in accordance with the most approved ideas for strength and durability. They are built of brick, steel and concrete, and are as fireproof and sanitary as it is possible to make them. Over 800 tons of sand and 3,000 barrels of cement were used in building them. Some idea of the strength may be had from the 43 reinforced concrete piers in the basement, each capable of supporting 150 tons. The buildings are not only large but the equipment is up to date in every way. They are built along railway sidings close to the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad and loading and unloading can be done directly from the cars. There are 17 receiving and delivering doors, nine of which are on railroad sidings. There are also spiral chutes, three electric elevators of great capacity, a 200,000 pound registering track scale, and automatic grain scales. In the departments for storing household goods there are 121 fireproof rooms of various sizes. These rooms have steel doors and window frames—and in those in which pianos are kept there is a system of vapor heating in which an even temperature is maintained. The departments for storing merchandise have also been provided with every facility for conveniently handling goods. Every room in every department is kept neat and clean and there is order and system throughout. Visitors are forcefully impressed with the thoroughness on every hand for rendering the most efficient service. The Harrisburg Storage Company has been in successful operation for a number of years, and has established an extensive business. Vance C. McCormick is president, J. Austin Brandt, vice president, and D. Bailey Brandt, secretary and treasurer.
