Additional Sports on Page 9 MANY LANCASTER CATTLE Farmers are Holding Fattened Stock Higher Prices Lancaster, Pa., May 17.--In spite of the ravages made by the foot and mouth disease the farmers of Lancaster county fattened a large number of calves during the winter, but are not putting them on the market because of prices offered by dealers. The calf for which the farmers paid 8 cent pound last fall before the foot and mouth disease outbreak, have only recently been bringing 8 and 8 1/2 cent. Virtually the only profit the farmers would have would be through the weight through fattening, but margin of profit would be small, because of the high prices of feed. It is believed better prices can be had in July.
