EFFECTS OF CIVIL SERVICE PLAN

There are likely to be some material shake-ups the police forces of Harrisburg and other third ass cities if the Walton bill providing civil serve examinations for the police and several other epartments is finally passed by the General Asembly. The legislative leaders agreed this mornig to try to pass it, and they are likely to succeed. he measure was once passed by both branches but absequently recalled from the Governor. Since en it has been amended in several respects but ot in such a way as to eliminate the requirement two years' experience for present employes of ne various departments affected in order to make em exempt from the proposed examinations.

In other words present employes of the several epartments affected who have not had two years xperience will be "ripped" out under the proosed law and can only get their jobs back if they neceed in passing the civil service examinations the same basis as absolutely new applicants for e positions. In Harrisburg perhaps a dozen poeemen will be ousted if the measure finally bemes a law.

While the civil service plan of selecting city emoves undoubtedly has some features of merit the an of the Walton bill for introducing the system ay properly be subject to some criticism. Under e operation of the system, as we understand the lan, all old employes in the several departments fected must be retained save those lacking two ars experience. In cities, therefore, in which the olicemen, for instance, have been politically appinted to their present posts, the political appoints must be retained without examination unless ismissed on charges. It is easy to conceive, thereof a condition in which the policemen ty, appointed under the influence of a particular olitical party, must be retained even in case anther political party ultimately obtains control of e city administration.

That would be well enough if the retained policeen were men who got their jobs through examiation in which politics had no part but as things ould work out under the Walton bill the police rces would be composed of men appointed rough political influence until such time as the esent policemen were retired through age or until ney died or were removed on charges, -save, of urse, in the cases of the few who would have to because they have not served two years.

THE FETE DAY OF JOAN OF ARC

On the fete day of Joan of Arc on Sunday, Engsh soldiers joined with French soldiers and civilns, according to reports, in paying tribute to the emory of the maid of Orleans. The name itself a reminder that England and France were once gaged in a struggle which lasted a century, and nat the conclusion of the Hundred years' War was ought about only when the troops of Britain were riven to defeat and the troops of France led to ctory by a seventeen-year old girl. Yet the subcts of George V now join with the citizens of the ench republic in honoring the memory of that deut and heroic Domremy maid.

About the statue of Joan of Arc in Paris were led flowers in profusion during Sunday's celeration. Those who regard the peasant girl as a int, knelt at the feet of the images. French and nglish, Catholics and Protestants, soldiers and vilians, men and women, observed the fete day perhaps the most prominent character but one the history of France, and surely one of the

It is no longer necessary to argue whether Joan of Arc did or did not converse with messengers of Heaven, or whether she was prompted by divine or by diabolic guidance to approach the Dauphin with her unprecedented request and, winning consent, to lead her victorious troops in her country's battles. The historic fact is that she, commanderin-chief of the armies of France at seventeen years of age, did lead her soldiers from victory to vic-of age, did lead her soldiers from victory to victory, winning for herself by these accomplishments martyrdom and eternal fame.

The English condemned the Maid of Orleans to be burned at the stake as a witch, and the French made no efforts to rescue her, yet those were the English and the French of centuries ago, whose prejudices were unlike the prejudices of the allied English and French of to-day.

POSTAL SAVINGS BUSINESS BY MAIL

An extension of the postal savings system has just been announced by Postmaster General Burleson in an order permitting persons whose own postoffices are not included among the designated postal savings banks to make deposits by mail in such banks in their vicinities. The innovation will be of benefit especially to farmers living at considerable distances from the government's postal savings depositories. The smaller postoffices are not Institute of Chemistry in London. Unincluded in the postal savings system and their breakable glass for miners' lamps and patrons had accordingly been deprived of the system's benefits before the issuance of the order permitting them to make deposits by mail in the larger postoffices.

According to the Postmaster General the new rule was made as the result of the insistent demands coming to the department, as an example of which he quotes a letter received from a farmer, advanced in age, who mildly complained that he like in relation to the manufacture of and his wife wanted to deposit their savings with glass. As the result, the research com the government, but that they were told at the mittee reports eleven formulas which nearest depository that their money could not be cared for at that office because they were not patrons of it. Under the new arrangement the aged couple will be able to send a money order representing their savings to the designated depository, and to withdraw desired amounts, likewise by mail, at any time.

It is manifest that one great advantage of this extension of the government's young postal savings system will be to bring into circulation large amounts of money that have previously been hoarded. Already there have been deposited in the postal savings banks millions of dollars that had before been secreted in many thousands of stockings and in numerous other hiding places.

It has been pointed out by the Postmaster General that postal savings receipts have during the last year broken all records, and an interesting piece of additional information is that more than half of these receipts come from foreign-born citizens. Immigrants turn to the government for the safe- places affected. Most of them may be guarding of their money principally because they have had sad experiences with swindlers of their own nationalities who have conducted private banks at times and gone off with the deposits. The war, too, has had something to do with it, since foreigners who had been sending money abroad before the outbreak of hostilities are now making their deposits at the grated windows of Uncle Sam's postoffices instead.

Further increases of postal savings deposits may be expected since the department has entered the without many of the usual formalities. Educated women similarly in need mail order business, so to speak, and is disposing of employment can be taken into the of its postal savings certificates by means of its middle and lower classes of boys schools, own postal service.

The legislators who took a ten-day vacation for Washington's Birthday are now paying up for it by remaining session until after midnight.

Colonel Roosevelt, or at least the colonel's lawyers, are demonstrating in the Barnes controversy that they still have the fighting spirit.

Apparently not all the purging of the New York state Republican linen has yet been accomplished.

Uncle Sam's people are making good in their determination not to become unduly excited pending receipt of the
