HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Henrietta D. Grauel

Educating the Grocer

Mayor Mitchell of New York City has a food supply committee working under his direction in an attempt to discover ways of securing food for less money or, in other words, to reduce the high cost of living. One of the first messages this committee sent out was that food purchased in bulks was from a third to one-half lower in cost than carton goods. They expected that women would boycott package goods in favor of bulk articles and that food prices would come down at once. But their message was not news to housekeepers who know well enough that they must pay for fancy packages and the extra labor of packing them and all.

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON.

CONTINUED. She lowered her head suddenly, and I was made more miserable than before. In the dear lady's eyes! I forgot and forgave much in recognition of this instant of genuine feeling on her part. It was not necessary for her to complete the sentence so humbly begun. "Their departure was made with some degree of caution. Mrs. Titus rather considerably reminding herself that my interests were at stake. I saw them aboard the train. She played her part admirably—I will say that for her. She lifted her veil so that I could bestow a farewell filial kiss upon her cheek. Jasper Junior's eyes popped very wide open at this, and as he shook my hand warmly at parting he said: "You are a wonder, John—a sure enough wonder. Why, hang it all, she doesn't even let dad do that."

"Say that you forgive me."

CHAPTER XXIV. The Count Wants the Castle.

I SAW them board the train. In my heart there was the memory of a dozen kisses I had bestowed in repentant horror upon the half asleep Rosemary, who, God bless her little soul, cried bitterly on being torn away from my embrace. "Well," said Billy Smith, taking me by the arm a few minutes later, "let's have a bite to eat and a cold bottle before we go to bed, old chap. I hope to heaven she gets through all right. I am strong for her, aren't you?" "I am," said I, with conviction, coming out of a daze. He led me off to a cafe, where he seemed to be more or less at home, and where it was bright and gay for him, but gloomier than the grave to me. I drove the car home the next day. When he got down at the garage, Britton shivered and drew a prodigious breath. It was as if he had not breathed for hours. We had gone the distance in little more than half the time taken on the trip down. "My word, sir," was all he said, but there was a significant tremor in his voice. It snacked of pride. Mrs. Titus placidly inquired how we had got along and appeared quite relieved when I told her we had caught the train at K. Jasper Junior revealed a genuine interest in the enterprise, but spoiled it all by saying that Alice, now prematurely safe, was most likely to leap out of the frying pan into the fire by marrying some blithering forger and having the whole beastly business to do over again. "How soon do they go?" asked Poopendyke late that afternoon, after listening to Mrs. Titus' amiable prophecies concerning Aline's future activities and getting my harassed ear in a moment of least resistance. "I don't know," said I hopelessly. I had heard about all I could endure concerning his lordship's magnificent estates in England, and the sort of a lord he was besides. "There's nothing to do but wait, Fred."
