There is much human nature in men. This profound observation finds its illustration in recent events in ecclesiastical circles. One of these was a battle of words; in the other they came to blows.

The first case was marked by such a degree of violent, severe and offensive language as to cause intense regret in the church at large. We would go to the farthest to uphold the right of any good man to call things by their right names, but it may be done without descending, even in heated debate, to personal re- crimination. This gives the enemy occasion to blaspheme. It also grieves the Holy Spirit. It hurts the one who speaks more than one who hears. He may not be aware of it, but whosoever speaks ill of his brother, injures his own soul. And there is no possible apology or justification for violent vituperation. It should be carefully avoided for the honor of God, the good of the Church, and the credit of religion. It should be repented of when a good man falls into this great sin.

In another case two parties in a church quarreled and came to blows in the house of God! If time and place add to the enormity of such an unseemly fight, then this was an aggravated transgression. It is of no importance who was the aggressor, or in the right, or who struck the first blow. The struggle was disgraceful to all who participated. In all controversies he who controls his temper, and is careful not to overstep the borders of propriety, is master of the situation, if his opponent gets mad. And there are no conceivable circumstances in which it is right for christians to come to fist-cuffs in their place of worship—or out of it. Civil law and church courts are adequate to the adjustment of all disputes, and it is wicked to fight about them.

This is indeed the church militant. But our enemies are the world, the flesh and the devil, and he is no true soldier who makes war on his comrades.—N. Y. Observer.

One of the most singular mechanical operations imaginable is the making of gold lace. The refiner first prepares a solid rod of silver, about an inch in thickness; he heats this rod, applies upon the surface a sheet of gold leaf, burnishes this down, and so on until the gold is about one-hundredth part of the thickness of the silver. The rod is then subjected to a train of processes which brings it down to the state of fine wire, when it is passed through holes in a steel plate, lessening step by step in diameter. The gold never deserts the silver, but adheres closely to it, and shares all its mutations; it is one hundredth part the thickness of the silver at the beginning, and it maintains the same ratio to the end. As to the thinness to which the gold-coated rod of silver can be brought, the limit depends on the delicacy of human skill. It has been calculated, however, that the gold actually placed on the very finest silver wire for gold lace is not more than one-millionth of an inch in thickness, that is, not above one-tenth the thickness of ordinary gold leaf.
