The anthracite coal trade continues extremely dull and the production slightly increased from week to week. During the month of January this year the anthracite and bituminous coals together have increased something over seventy per centum on what they were in the corresponding month last year. With such a weight as this on the market there seems but one way of relief, and that is to lesson the production of coal. The next best thing to this if operators will persist in going on with their work, is to hold their coal firmly at circular prices. The general belief is still maintained that all the anthracite coal mined in 1880 will be required and used, whether the prices are a dollar per ton more or less. For manufacturing purposes the difference of a dollar per ton in fuel, when distributed and divided in the cost of manufactured material, is scarcely appreciable. The market for coal, therefore, in a great degree depends with the operators themselves. If they determine to have remunerative prices for coal they have but to fix them at the proper point and adhere to their circular rate. When the trade and business of the country require more manufactures of iron the requirement will be duly met, and cannot be without the free use of coal. Those therefore, who may determine to proceed with coal mining have only to settle with themselves the cost of carrying the coal piled. If this point can not be satisfactorily reconciled with themselves let them call a halt in production until the current market demand catches up with the supply. There need be no serious difficulty with the coal operators if they will but consent to act in concert and in harmony.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Another instance of a "lost art" presents itself in the case of the Egyptian obelisk, the removal of which is now being superintended by Lieutenant Commander Gorringe, of the U. S. Navy. Commander Gorringe, who is well versed in modern engineering, testifies that it would be impossible to improve any part of the constructions of the foundation and pedestal of this great shaft, constructed about two thousand years ago. The "iron or steel" dogs which bound the several pieces of granite together in precisely the same manner as in the best work of the kind at the present day (including the lead packing) are of a quality of metal surpassing any productions of Russia, Sweden or Pennsylvania. While it is as hard as steel it is as ductile as the softest wrought iron. To remove the foundations, says Gorringe, "has been as great a piece of work as it must have been to construct them." "The stone works of the obelisk is not calculated to excite fresh wonder, but the quality of "iron or steel" described is a nut to crack for the metal workers of the present day which would immortalize the successful experiment.

In a letter of instruction to the census supervisors, the superintendent say: The superintendent is aware of no reasons existing in law for regarding woman as ineligible for appointment as enumerators. Each supervisor must be the judge for himself whether such appointments in any number would be practically advantageous in his own district. It is clear that in many regions such appointments would be highly objectionable, but the superintendent is not prepared to say that localities may not be found where a canvass of the population by woman could be conducted without any disadvantage being encountered by reason of the sex of the enumerator.

A grand banquet in honor of Senator

John P. Jones of Nevada was given at Delmonico's Saturday evening by ex-Senator S. W. Dorsey of Arkansas. The large banqueting hall was draped in bunting, and the table presented a marvel of decorative skill. Each of the fifty-four guests present was presented with a memento of the dinner in the form of an elegantly designed menu, finished in gold, and having on the opposite leaf a beautiful bird, dress in national feathers. On the back of the card, which was covered with satin, the guests name was printed in large letters, running diagonally across the satin. Senator Dorsey presided, with Senator Jones on his right and Gov. A. B. Cornell on his left.
