Senator Blaine is undoubtedly very popular with the Republican party. He has hosts of friends who will do valiant service for him. But General Grant is more popular, and he is stronger outside of his party. The New Yoak Tribune is doing good service for Blaine. It has sent out circulars to the local Republican Committeemen in Pennsylvania, asking an expression of their preferences. It has, of course, received prompt attention from Blaine's friends, and it makes the most of the encouragement thus given him. The proportion is much less than it seems, however, when we note its proportion to the whole army of committeemen. Mr. Blaine's friends would do well to hear from the whole number before they make too confident assertions.—Albany Express.
