In the early Autumn of last year the Rev. Washington Gladden, of Shringfield, Mass., sent the following note to 100 of the representative business and professional men of this city: "I desire to find out for the benefit of the boys, how the leading men of that city spent their boyhood. Will you be kind enough to tell me: (1) whether your home during the first fifteen years of your life was on a farm, in a village, or in a city; and (2) whether you were accustomed, during part of that period, to engage in any kind of work when you were not at school?" Out of the 100 persons who received the notes, eighty-eight answered the questions, and Mr. Gladden was so much pleased with his success that he embodied their reports in a lecture, which he delivered before a large audience in one of the city churches. It appears that of the eighty-eight, sixty-four were brought up on farms and were farmers' sons, twelve in villages and towns, and twelve in cities. Of the twenty-four who lived in villages and towns, one-quarter were accustomed to do farmwork. It is proper to say, therefore, that of these eighty-eight of the wealthiest and most prominent and useful citizens of Springfield, seventy were trained in their youth upon farms. Of the eighteen boys who lived in cities and villages, five of them report that they had no work to do, while the rest were sons of people in rather poor circumstances and were accustomed to do all sorts of work up to the time they left the paternal roof. To sum up: Of eighty-three hard workers in their younger days, while only five had "nothing in particular to do."

A new organization calling itself an army, led by a General, and using all military terms, is now at work in England. It has no sectarian principles, except to make bad men good, good men better. The General holds war congresses and determines on the seizure of one city after another, while the singing of 'war-songs' by "Hallelujah lasses" is enough to startle any one. The movement, however, in spite of its peculiar features, has a very serious meaning by the very fact of its popularity and success. It indicates clearly that, in spite of all that has been done by various denominations to reach the poor and lowly, there are still hundreds of thousands of people among the lower classes who have longings for better life and character enough to give up bad habits that have been lifelong, yet who have not been found by the workers for the churches. Something novel of this kind may, and often does, reach thousands that no church organization can reach.

The following is a copy of a telegram which was sent to Mr. Conkling by Mr. Cameron immediately after the declaration of Pennsylvania for Grant:

HARRISBURG, Penn., Feb. 4, 1880, 6 P.M.
Hon. ROSCOE CONKLING, Washington, D.C.:
Our convention instructed its delegates to Chicago to vote as a unit and vote for Grant.
J. D. CAMERON.

And the following is a copy of Senator Conkling's promptly telegraphed answer to the above dispatch:

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4, 1880.
Senator J. D. CAMERON, Harrisburg, Penn.:
Your telegram received. Pennsylvania renders another great and patriotic service to the country by pronouncing for General Grant. I rejoice at her action.
ROSCOE CONKLING.

Now these were private and confidential messages. We think they have never before been printed, and certainly they should remove all doubt as to the sincerity of the fast and foremost friends and advocates of Grant's nomination. These dispatches show, moreover, that Senators Conkling and Cameron entertain no fear or expectation that General Grant will decline to be a candidate.—Buffalo Express

John Wanamaker, chairman of the Irish Relief Committee, Philadelphia, having telegraphed to Dublin that doubts were expressed as to the further need of help, and asking for a statement of the condition of the famine in Ireland, received a cable despatch from Archbishop McCabbe that the distress was increasing and the famine extending in some districts, and that money was urgently required for food and seed.

The Irish societies of New-York have resolved to parade on St. Patrick's day; but those of Brooklyn have resolved to contribute the money a parade would cost to the relief fund.

At the meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Peabody Educational Fund Chief Justice F. C. Manning, of Louisiana, was unanimously chosen to fill the vacancy in the board occasioned by the death of General Richard Taylor.
