Dispatches from Harrisburg say the scenes in the House of Representatives Monday night beggar description. They were the most uproariously disgraceful of this session, which has been marked by many scenes unbefitting the dignity of a legislative body, and it is to be doubted if they have often been equaled in previous years. During the session from half past seven o'clock until ten the house did no business at all, except to pass three bills on first reading, on one of which the yeas and nays were called. The house applauded one speaker and hissed another, the speaker pounded with his gavel until his arm must have ached and still motions were hulled at the clerk's head in rapid succession without regard to the order of business. The filibusterer was rampant and he practiced his art on every motion that came before the house. The speaker at length completely lost his temper and evidently his head, as he made some grossly unparliamentary rulings. The main cause of the row seemed to be that the Philadelphia members have made up their minds to have no business transacted by the house until their pet schemes are put through.

The editor of the Cleveland Leader has been visiting Washington to see the President, with whom he is on familiar intimacy. The latter alluded to the early position of his mother, left a widow with several small children on a meagre farm partly cleared. For twenty years after the husband and father died the widow had never a luxury and scarcely a comfort of life. "And now," said the great man, "it has been my study to promote her happiness and comfort in every way possible in order to make up for the privations she suffered during my boyhood. She has the best room in my house, and there is nothing she wants but what she always has. Whenever I go to Mentor she always accompanies me. Whenever she wishes to go to New Hampshire to visit her relatives, she goes and I always go with her. In that manner I am trying to make up to her what she was deprived of during the days of her sore poverty." The venerable mother has the best room in the White House and Congress generously voted to put an elevator in for her especial accommodation. She is honored of the nation as well as of her son.

The temperance law of Kansas forbids these of fermented wine for sacramental purposes, and many of the churches find themselves in a predicament. The rector of the Episcopal church in Lawrence, Kan., thus referred to the matter last Sunday:

"The Bishop and clergy of our church have decided to pay no attention whatever to any such law. We are, under our ordination vows, obliged to administer the sacrament in accordance with the law and usages of this church. If we do not do so, we would be stripped of our ministry. We are willing to render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, but we still give to God the things that are His. I say, as did Peter, 'Judge ye whether we should obey men rather than God.' Of one thing we may be assured, we shall never recognize for a moment the attempts of human legislation to destroy the great sacrament of the Christian church."

The reverend gentleman and his brethren of the clergy might easily avoid a violation of the law by procuring unfermented wine which is now used by many congregations even where there is no constitutional provision forbidding the use of fermented wine.

It is said that the bonds stolen from the Northampton Savings Bank were restored before the release of Leary.
