Religion of the Presidents.

A New York letter to the Cincinnati Gazette contains this statement concerning the religious belief of the Presidents of the United States:

It is to be observed that all the Presidents were, with one exception, men who respected Christianity. Washington and Garfield, however, were the only ones who were church communicants. Adams married a clergyman's daughter (Abigail Smith), but he did not accept her views. He was inclined to Unitarianism, which in his day was becoming very prevalent in Massachusetts. Jefferson was not a believer in Christianity at least while President. He had, during his residence in France, become skeptical and his election was opposed by some on the score of infidelity. After Tom Paine had written his Age of Reason, Jefferson invited him to return to America, which was understood to be a direct recognition and acceptance of his opinions. Infidelity at that time was so fashionable that in polite society it was rather eccentric to avow different opinions.

Madison, while a student at Princeton College, was of a religious turn, but it wore off under the cares of office. His early religious connections were Presbyterian. Monroe is said to have favored Episcopacy. John Quincy Adams was inclined to Unitarianism. Jackson was a Methodist, and died in the communion of that church. Van Buren was brought up in the Reformed Dutch Church, but afterward became inclined to Episcopacy. Harrison favored the Methodists. Tyler was an Episcopalian. Polk was baptised by a Methodist preacher after his term of office had expired. Taylor favored Episcopacy. Fillmore attended the Unitarian Church. Frank Pierce was a member of the Congregational Society in Concord though not a communicant. Buchanan was a Presbyterian. Lincoln attended Gurley's Church (Congregational) as often as he could, but was not a member, though his religious convictions were deep. Grant's predilections are well known, and so are Garfield's.

The World's London special says: The feeling of humiliation over the inglorious result of the struggle with the Boers, has been aggravated by the news of the Boers' demand for indemnity for the loss and injury inflicted on them. The Boer leaders claim, and the British government by its course practically admits, that the war was forced on them. It is difficult to see how Gladstone can refuse to entertain their demand.

Experienced and impartial judges believe that this Boer business will involve the compulsory retirement of England from the whole of South Africa before very long. Many anticipate an early renewal of the war. The agreement arrived at by Gens. Joubert and Wood is little more than an armistice. The actual conditions of peace will not be definitely settled until the Royal Commission gets to work. The Boers can easily object to some of the details, and if they do they will not be left to face the British single-handed, the feeling against the blundering and bad faith shown by the Colonial Office agents being almost as intense in the Orange Free States as in Boerland. A great South African Republic is quite among the probabilities.

Queen Victoria's gold and silver plate which is kept at Windsor is said to be worth $15,000,000. When the Queen entertained the late Czar shortly after the marriage of his daughter to the Duke of Edinburgh, gold plate to the value of $10,- 000,000 was used. The custodianship of the gold pantry at Windsor is considered an office of great trust.
