P. POWELL, P. M.

We were not aware that our esteemed townsman, G. H. WOOD, the photographer, was the patentee of a musical instrument, but the following item from the Tunkhannock Republican, which is correct in every other particular, would indicate that he is:

Mr. James Vose, of Keiserville, purchased a very fine Geo. H. Wood organ of Messrs. Strunk Brothers, of Homet's Ferry, Bradford county, one day last week. These gentlemen are all practical musicians, are upright and honorable and are deserving of the confidence of the public. They have sold quite a number of musical instruments in this and adjoining counties in the past and at present are doing a more lively business than ever.

Our cotemporary might have added that the Messrs. STRUNK are agents for our well known and reliable dealers, HOLMES & PASSAGE.

At a meeting of the teachers of Wilkes Barre held on Saturday last the following memorial to the late ALICE DOANE of Springfield township, was adopted.

Two years ago Alice A. Doane was elected teacher of an A primary grade, Franklin Grammar School. She came amongst us a stranger, but in a few short months her strong common sense, her evenly balanced disposition won her the respect and love of pupils and associates. Time but fixed the favorable first impressions and soon she established a reputation as an intelligent instructor and far seeing disciplinarian.

She was born among the mountains of Northern Pennsylvania. Her parents coming from the granite hills of the Connecticut Valley, were in direct descent from the Doane who landed from the Mayflower December 21, 1620. She was educated at the State Normal School, Mansfield, Pa., and at the age of twenty-two, thoroughly prepared, entered the public schools of Williamsport, where she taught acceptably for three years. Thence she went to Corning, N. Y., remaining there one year; afterwards, upon the warm personal recommendation of the lamented Prof. F. A. Allen, she was employed by the third district of this city.

By the Board and her Principal she was regarded as one of the brightest ornaments of our corps of teachers, circumspect in her actions and conversations, skillful in teaching, and her pupils and patrons were fond of her.

As an inmate friend she could be trusted without fear of misplaced confidence. As an associate teachers she was one of our most faithful co-laborers, ready to do all that she could for the cause of education, and influencing her pupils to be earnest, upright and useful.

So firmly would she advocate the cause of any one she thought in the right, and so conscientious was she in the observance of religious duties, that, though not united with any church, those with whom she daily associated looked upon her as a Christian.

After a lingering illness of three months, commencing with malarial fever, which developed into a typhoid type, she peacefully passed away, April, 18th, 1881. The same sterling traits which marked her in health did not depart from her in sickness, and weeks before she died she expressed her confidence in the Saviour's sustaining love and forgiveness.

In her death, the second of our number within two years, we recognize that one by one God is calling upon us to render an account of our training of immortal minds whom he entrusts to our teaching year by year.
