There was neither fraud nor violence employed in carrying South Carolina elections, but equally with Wade Hampton the Charleston, S. C., News knows better and thus relieves its conscience:

Senator Hampton in his speech in the Senate on Thursday admitted that there had been irregularities and frauds at elections in this State, and announced his unalterable determination to try at the earliest moment to rectify the wrong that had been done. The "irregularities," or whatever else we please to call them, were justified and justifiable—just as revolution or rebellion is permissible when there is no other escape from tyrannical government, under which neither life nor property is safe. It is manlier to rest on the right of revolution, whatever form it takes, than on denials which do not carry convictions, and on evasions which deceive nobody worth deceiving. Senator Hampton, in his speech at Blackville on July 4, 1878, said frankly that if elections were to be carried by fraud the State would soon cease to be worth saving. What was done in 1876, in 1878 and in 1880 was necessary. Similar work is indispensable no longer, and the people will not put up with it. The Democratic masses cannot be whipped or spurred up to the point of taking the chances of Albany Penitentiary. It is not right that that they should, for there is not the need now that there was before. Nothing but the unalterable determination of the white people of the State to carry the elections, by hook or crook, put the Democratic party in position to prove, in practice that under Democratic rule, the taxes should be lowered, that the laws would be justly administered, and that the condition of the whole people would rapidly improve. These are facts, not promises. And they spring from the opportunities given by the frauds and irregularities which our opponents insist on treating as mere devices to take offices from one set of persons and give them to another set. For such a purpose the people would not tolerate chicanery at elections. This is one reason why there is a determination to have a free vote and a fair count hereafter. The means which can be justified where the very existence of the people is at stake are unendurable when the objective point is the gratification of individual ambition and the satisfaction of personal greed. No one can tell at this moment in what particular way we shall continue to maintain respectable and equal government and at the same time do away with flagrant abuses at elections. Somehow it will be done. The Democracy know what is wanted, and are well able to put their political household in order.

Paul Boynton, the swimmer, has arrived in New York having made his escape from the Chilans by whom he was captured while serving in the Peruvian torpedo service.

It is announced that the great corner in grain which parties in New York and Chicago have been endeavoring to continue is broken. The result was a decline of from two to four cents in wheat and one to two and a half cents in corn. There was considerable excitement.

At the annual meeting of the Petroleum Exchange it was reported that the average daily production of last year was 75,000 barrels, with a stock of 21,000,000 barrels held in the pipe lines and 4,000,000 more at the wells in private tanks and refineries. It is estimated that the average daily consumption of crude oil throughout the world is 45,000 barrels.

Bids for supplying and transporting supplies for the Indian department were opened Tuesday in New York. The prices asked were higher than last year for provisions and transportation, but lower for dry goods.

It is said that England is disturbed in consequence of the operations of the Russians in the Pacific. She intends to build extensive fortifications near the American line, and will probably locate a strong naval reserve there.

Probably a revolution is going on at Santo Domingo. The Spanish mail steamer was not allowed to enter the port of the capital under the pretext of the unhealthfulness of the crew. An unwonted commotion was noticed among the people on shore.
