Judge Ingham's Lecture.

The seventh and last lecture of the Institute course was delivered on Monday evening by Hon. Judge Ingham. The subject of the lecture was "Success in Life." In commencing, the lecturer said, a weather-proof audience like this deserves to be entertained. He was sorry to be compelled to read a lecture for there is something which is never found written, in the tone and glowing thought of an extemporaneous speaker. There are some advantages, however, in having a lecture written; correct expressions are used and the results of careful thought are clearly expressed. We often hear it remarked that this or that man is "successful." The ordinary meaning is that he has accumulated property or achieved fame. Such success is only for the few; the success I mean is for the many. It is the attainment of that degree of happiness which the Creator has placed within reach of human beings upon this earth. If there are any who suppose that this happiness comes as naturally as the winds and tides, they have been dull observers of the ways of men. Some hold that we are creatures of fate; others that every individual controls his own destiny. Ordinary observation teaches that while we are surrounded by uncontrollable circumstances yet there is a wide field wherein we may choose our own paths for good or evil. We must, as individuals, accept the situations in which we are placed. The condition may be made better or worse, and the resolute endeavor of every one should be to make it better. The young should look first with intelligent eyes at their own surroundings and then determine their course of action. Their object in life should be wisely considered and clearly defined in their own minds and the paths by which they hope to reach it carefully selected. Wealth and fame may be desirable; but the road to happiness does not necessarily lead to such ends. The wealth that comes as the result of honest labor is desirable; the honors which are heaped upon those who unselfishly labor to benefit their country or mankind are more desirable than the brightest jewels that adorn a crown. The ancient teachings tended to stimulate the young to achieve fame; their idea of immortality was the immortality of a great name. The immortality which wise men now prize is the happy immortality of the soul; and no plan of a successful life can be formed which does not include that.

Some of the general points which should be considered by all young persons are health, education, habits, business, marriage, politics and religion. Health is the basis of happiness and the usual basis of all solid achievements. Those who have good constitutions may easily preserve health; but it often happens that they are the most prodigal of nature's priceless gift. The human organism, the temple of the soul was made for use, not abuse. No laws of health can be broken with impunity, and they who will not obey must suffer the penalty. This penalty may be mere discomfort; it may be settled disease; it may be early death. Success in life depends largely upon good and steady habits. Gen. Grant in speaking of his grand movement which resulted in the capture of Vicksburg said: "A great deal can be accomplished in eight days." Those who at times must make exceptionally great efforts, will find a vast reserve of powers in systematic habit. Learn to do things systematically and you will save much valuable time. In all the works of life habits adapted to the place are essential to success. Having said so much for good habits it is unnecessary to add, avoid forming bad habits. A young man might as well hope for success in life with a bad habit as a wrecked mariner to swim when loaded with lead. If you have a bad habit get rid of it at once. Be masters of yourselves, remembering that he who rules his own spirit is better than he who taketh a city. The education which conduces to success in life is that culture of mind and body which enlarges and strengthens the natural powers, it may be obtained in schools, in the fields and in the workshops. The opportunities of acquiring knowledge are now so widely diffused that the young have only to reach out determined hands and grasp what they need. Schools and colleges afford the best opportunities for the deepest and widest culture; but neither schools nor masters can drive true education into the heads of heedless, idle and vain scholars. Education does not consist in the parrot like repetition of other peoples words and thoughts. People must learn to think and act for themselves, gathering from the wide fields of history, literature and science the accumulations of ages of thought and experience, they must digest and make it their own. Besides the practical advantage of education in all kinds of business it conduces largely to success in life in adding to our enjoyments. Carlyle who had explored the world of knowledge felt mingled pity and reverence for his father whose life was limited to a circle of fifty miles and whose knowledge was derived from his bible and the oral memories of old men. Knowledge is a perennial fountain refreshing, invigorating and delighting the mind while life remains and sends a better soul into eternity. A suitable business or employment is essential to success in life. The rich as well as poor should not be without a means of earning a living. The accumulated wealth of years may vanish in a day; the uncertainties of business life make it necessary for all to have a care that misfortune comes not upon them unprepared. Establish yourselves in some of the great grooves of necessary employments, be they what they may. Establish yourselves by fitness, by thoroughness, by patience and by determination. Blessed are those who keep clear of the dark shadow of debt, and enjoy luxuries that are paid for. In whatever business you engage let it bear the impress of your integrity. Let truth, honor and honesty be your mottoes and success cannot be far off. St. Paul said he that giveth in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth not in marriage doeth better. Paul was called to immense labor in propagating the religion of Christ, in perils often, in weariness, hunger, thirst, cold and nakedness, he planted the seeds of christianity throughout the civilized world. Such labors would have hardly been as successful with the additional cares of a family. Today no doubt many are so situated that it is best for them not to marry. With these exceptions success in life includes a suitable marriage. Suitable because the bonds of matrimony which with congenial persons are capable of developing the purest, noblest and most delightful traits of human character; are also capable of becoming iron chains of discord and despair. If youth ever has wisdom, let it be shown in marriage. Love is the great theme of the ages. The poets sing of it, musicians laud it and all nature proclaims it. It heals contentions, softens trials, lightens labors, strengthens hope and pours a flood of sunlight upon all around. David Wilmore whose genial face was seen not long ago in Towanda and whose name and fame extended throughout the Union, once advised a young man to let politics alone. Political life is full of anxieties and those who pursue it as a business or gain are unwise. It is our duty to keep ourselves well informed as to public events and as to the character of public men so that we can vote understandingly. Our government must be preserved, the principles for which our fathers fought and died must be sustained. Though politics as a business is not desirable, still there is no reason why an honest man should refuse an office that comes within his reach and is worth having. Through political wire-pulling to the winds, perform your duties honestly believing that

"—All things good await
Him who cares not to be great
But as he serves or saves the State:
Not once or twice in our rough island story
The path of duty was the way to glory."

There can be no plan of a successful life which does not recognize our dependence upon the over ruling power of the divine creator. In the midst of the cares, responsibilities and afflictions of life we need the helping hand of the Almighty and must call upon him in prayer. Low is the spirit that feels no gratitude for endless benefits; dull is the clay that kindles not with love for the Creator of love itself. Deep in our hearts should be the perpetual fountains of love and adoration for the most High. There can be no true success in life for those who do not observe this first and greatest commandment. Abou Ben Adhem merely asked to have his name written down as one who loved his fellow men; but when the list of those whom God had blest was shown "Behold Ben Adhem's name led all the rest!" Love is the very sunshine of life; the wider it extends among men, the more happiness it diffuses. Love sent aid to burning Chicago, food to starving Ireland and docetrs and nurses to fever-stricken Vicksburg. The highest achievement that any human being can hope for is to be one of God's factors in the glorious work of establishing universal happiness. My words may inspire hope and resolution in some; and remember that mistakes and failures may discourage you often, but rise hopefully when you fail, and never be discouraged for God is always in reach of prayer. B

SOLDIERS' SONS.—All soldiers' sons over the age of eight years are requested to meet at the Armory of Co. A., on Saturday, May 21st, at 4 o'clock, P. M., for the purpose of making a preliminary organization to participate in the decoration day ceremonies as a body of sons of soldiers of the late rebellion. Parents are requested to come with their sons, if possible. All are requested to be informed as to company and regiment in which the father served. It is hoped that the soldiers will see that their sons may be taught the proper observance of decorating now in order, that they will understand its meaning when they, as sons of soldiers, will be expected to take our places in the observance of these memorial services.
