Interest in the Senatorial muddle in New York is not confined to the eastern States, but attracts attention all over the country. In a paper published in McPherson, Kan., we find the following plain words from the pen of a former prominent politician of this state, Hon. C. F. Nichols: "Senator Conkling did not before his resignation, nor does he now own the Republican party of the State of New York or of the country. He may think he does, if so, the sooner he is apprised of that fact, the better. Senator Conkling is a man of great power, as also were Cæsar and Napoleon Bonaparte and many others we could mention, but their reign of terror came to an untimely end, and the principles of right and justice triumphed. So it will be with this contest. I am not among the number who believe that if he is beaten in the State of New York, that the undying principles of the great Republican party in that state will be lost or smothered out of sight. The State of New York will have a Republican party long after Senator Conkling is dead, that will wield a power in the shape of moulding the politics in this great country. Better be beaten once or even twice, that such a political tyrant may learn a lesson, that future generations will profit by. Teach such men that political despotism is not tolerated in this country; that free thought, free speech and equal rights are antagonistic to despotisms and tyrannies of all kinds. The states of New York and Pennsylvania have been ruled as with a rod of iron by Roscoe Conkling and the Cameron dynasty. The election of a United States Senator in Pennsylvania, lasted for several weeks and finally resulted in the election of a compromise candidate that Don Cameron could control, and did on the very first important vote that came before the Senate; and in the defeat of Hon. Galusha A. Grow, a man of large experience and of a national reputation, and acknowledged ability. G. A. Grow was the author of the homestead bill, and his name will be handed down to future generations, as the man who had the moral courage to stand up in his seat in Congress and advocate the rights of the poor man to a homestead out of the lands of the general government. He could not be elected because the Cameron dynasty said no: and consequently a man was elected, who if he could not vote with Don Cameron, would absent himself from the Senate chamber. This he done on the first important question that came before the Senate.

A great sweepstakes race has been arranged for three-year-olds $1,000 each with $2,000 added, to come off at Monmouth Park on July 7th, and Hindoo, Aranza and Crickmore have already entered. The distance will be one and a quarter miles.

A dispatch from Mazatlan reports the arrival there of the mate and four men of the schooner Eustace, who say the cook killed Capt. Hamsdy. He was imprisoned in the cabin and set the vessel on fire. The Eustace had a cargo valued at $70,000, including a lot of giant powder.

The New York Graphic's Washington special states that the President's friends say he has no desire to meet General Grant, and the friends of the latter declare that he will never speak to President Garfield again. Secretary Lincoln, however, has gone to Long Branch for the purpose, it is reported, of meditating between the President and Gen. Grant.

The Postoffice Inspector reports that tremendous efforts will be made by the steamboat companies on all the Southern and Western rivers where the Star service has been discontinued or reduced to break down the policy of economy and reform of the present Administration. Nearly all the postmasters at the river landings are merchants who are also agents of the steamboat companies. Many of these postmasters are getting up protests and in other ways attempting to manufacture public sentiment against the action of the Department. An officer of a railroad in Arkansas offers to carry the mails to points on the Memphis and St. Francis River route for $2,000 per year. The Department formerly paid $30,000 to the steamboat line. It appears that the Star route service as managed by Brady and the River and Harbor bill as engineered in Congress, bore intimate relations to each other.
