Dr. Stewart's Eulogy on Mr. Carnochan.

Below is the full text of Rev. Doctor J. S. STEWART'S admirable discourse delivered at the funeral of Capt. W. H. CARNOCHAN in the Troy Presbyterian church, Sunday afternoon June 19. The publication may seem somewhat late, but we were unable to procure the copy earlier. We extend thanks to our neighbors of the Reporter for an early proof of the eulogy:

TEXT—It is appointed unto men once to die.—Heb. 9: 27.

This is the season of exuberant life. Life throbs in its richest fullness in grass and leaves and flowers. Every bird, as it leaps from twig to twig, or floats in the radiant air, or sings in full-throated ease, is instinct with the intensest spirit of life. June is a perpetual rehearsal on a small scale of the original work of creation; it is a voice crying in the wilderness of unbelief and sin; "There is a God who has made all things and by whom all things consist." Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

And yet this season of life is by no means exempt from the blight of death. It is appointed unto men to die in June as well as in December. Death casts the malign shadow of his wings over the roses as surely as over the snow.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to fade; but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

So, in the very heart of this beautiful June we are come to bury out of our sight one who was marked by a fullness of intellectual life and of physical activity, but who was compelled to yield to the mandate, "Return, ye children of men!" In the height of his manhood—in the developing energy of his powers—in the sweet harvesting of professional success—in the full tide of worldly honor—in the enjoyment of the fondest love and increasing attractions of his wife and children, he has passed away; dying as a lamp burns out, as a rose drops its petals on the grass, as the sunset fades from the darkening sky. His body is here, but the animating spirit has gone beyond our sight into that mystic world that surrounds us like an atmosphere. We may cry like the ancients, "Vale, Vale, Vale!" but no response of living love returns to our straining ears and yearning hearts. No wonder the ancient Hebrews called that silent world, "Sheol," or the Greeks that invisible place, "Hades"! We hear our dead no more—we see them no more. We must needs live without them. It may be days or years before Hades opens its gates to receive our spirits—a weary road may stretch between us and them, but "one night waits for all, and once for all the way of death must be trod." It will not be long, after all before we mingle with the throng of the departed.

"A few more years shall roll,
A few more seasons come;
And we shall be with them at rest,
Asleep within the tomb."

This thought may come like a chill over our ardent spirits; it may cast a dismal shadow over the leaves and flowers of June; but yet it may be a salutary and sanctifying thought. God means us to reflect upon it when he sends those dark providences into our families and communities. The voice of death repeats over the exemplary prayer of Moses: "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

Death awaits all men. In all the long history of the world but two men have escaped death. But notice, that, though the fact of death be certain, the time of death is absolutely uncertain. Isaac said, "I know not the day of my death," and all men can re-echo this truth. We may have years to live, or only days and hours. The shadow of the death-angel may be already upon our hearts. The fingers of death may be even now upon our pulses, and the chill creeping along our blood. Who knows? Hence no man should boast of to-morrow; it may never exist for him; its light may fall upon his closed eyelids and marble face.

I cannot but call up this reflection as I stand here this afternoon. Here lies a young man—only forty-one; who, when I first met him one Spring evening in Towanda eleven years ago, was bright-eyed—bright-faced—strong of body—a vigorous, vigilant, live man. I met him in the office of our friend, George Montanye. They were two gifted and most promising young men; and both capable of much distinction in their profession. Now both are gone, and I, who seemed to have the poorest lease of life, have been permitted to speak over their lifeless bodies. So it is, oh! so often. "Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken and the other left." We cannot explain it. God is sovereign in recalling life, as he is in giving it. We can only say as to him: "The will of God be done!" We can only say as to ourselves: "Be ye also ready!"

Then notice again, that, though it is appointed unto men once to die, the appointment is made by our gracious Lord, and therefore the time must be the best time. I make no doubt of this. We accomplish, as an hireling, our day. The shadow falls from the hand of our heavenly Father, neither too soon nor too late. We finish our work. So God sees it, if we do not. This friend died in the midst of his career, cut off prematurely, we may feel disposed to say. No—no. He worked well. He toiled upward, relying upon his clear brain and his strong hand. He made himself; he made a prosperous career and a happy home. He lived justly and had a kind word for those he met. His earthly task he finished better than many do who live twice his years. The world and his friends have only kind and loving words for him. He has passed into hands of the God who, as he said, had always been good to him, and who, he trusted, would take care of him. And we cannot but hope that the turning of his heart in his last days to religious thoughts was the return of a weary child to his God and Saviour.

There is one other thought. If death be the common lot, then we need not fear lest the death of our friends may overwhelm us. Think of the dying that goes on in our world! Think that every second some soul goes forth into eternity! Think of the broken households, the lonely husbands and weeping wives, the sinking mothers and defenseless children! It is a picture to make angels weep. Yet somehow the world moves on through it all. The families are provided for; the heavy hearts are soothed; the children find a heavenly Father to take care of them. It is one of the wonders of God's love and grace; and it illustrates the vital, recuperative power there is in the human spirit. So, dear friends, despair not! Your heavenly Father careth for you. Lift your weeping eyes to consider the flowers and birds of this sweet June! God made them and God clothes and feeds them. Are ye not much better than they? Trust in God in this great affliction! He has sent it in love, and he means it for your good. He is not angry with you, but he is loving you all the more because he is afflicting you.

Are blessings in disguise."

Be sure, if you trust him, that he will stand by you; he will never leave nor forsake you; he will be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless. Let me close by quoting a short poem from some unknown author, whose heart had deeply felt these sweet and inspiring truths:

The clouds hahn heavy round my way,
I cannot see;
And thro' the darkness I believe
God leadeth me.
'Tis sweet to keep my hand in his,
While all is dim;
To close my weary, aching eyes,
And follow him.

Thro' many a thorny path he leads
My tired feet;
Thro' many a path of tears I go;
But it is sweet
To know that he is close to me,
My God, my Guide;
He leadeth me, and so I walk
Quite satisfied."

Mr. GEO. H. WOOD:
My Dear Sir—The picture arrived this morning, and was paid for and taken in less than two seconds after it was opened. It is without doubt the finest picture of any kind in town; in fact, the finest I ever saw at any price.

I cannot compliment you sufficiently for your talent, and assure you that you will never regret the labor bestowed on this piece of work; it will be productive of other similar work from this section and to no small amount. I have no doubt that by putting it on exhibition in window I could secure you hundreds of dollars worth of work. I have compared it with former one of same subject made by you at $15 I think, and this is very much finer.

My wife, who is a daughter of the subject, is perfectly carried away; you may consider her under obligations to you. Again thanking you, I remain,
