The wealth of the United States, in comparison with that of other nations, is the subject of a recent paper in Harper's Magazine. The united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland heads the list with a capital of $44,400,000,000, with an average income per inhabitant of $165. France has the second place in point of capital, $36,700,000,000; but is the fourth in the matter of average income, $125. The capital of the United States is $32,000,000,000; the average income $165. Germany has $22,000,000,000 of capital, with an average income of $857. The low countries have $11,150,000,000 capital, $130 of average income. Russia has but $15,000,000,000 of roubles. The annual accumulation of new wealth is, in the united kingdom $325,000,000; in France $375,000,000; in Germany, $200,000,000; in the United States, $825,000,000. In the last decade we have added more to our wealth than the capital value of Italy or Spain, with their accumulated inheritances of 2,000 years. Every sun sets upon our people better off by $2,300,000 than on the day before. The contrast between England, for example, and Italy calls attention to the important fact that but little of man's labor survives him. Without incessant reproduction a people soon become poor. Food is the thing least stored. It has been estimated that there is never more than one year's supply on hand, perhaps not so much. Only ideas and certain works of art seem to be capable of indefinite accumulation.

Bishop Stevens of Pennsylvania, who has just left Philadelphia for a brief vacation in Iowa and the mountains of McKean county, Pa., issued the following pastoral letter to the Episcopal clergy before his departure:

Having been asked by some of the clergy of this diocese as to whether they might not use in the public services of the church the newly revised version of the new testament, I think it best to state that, as the general convention of the church in 1823 adopted King James' version of the bible as published by Eyre & Strayer as the standard edition, and incorporated their action into what is now canon 18, title I., of the digest, no clergyman is at liberty to use any other version in his public ministrations. The church having taken careful and deliberate action and that action having been the law of the church for over 50 years, no clergyman will lightly violate the canon to which he has promised obedience.

Henry Ward Beecher preached on political corruption, Sunday morning. He said that many men who have been raised to high places were of a mushroom character. The great vices of politics was lying and whiskey. If the lures spread for our legislators were known to the public, they would make the cheeks of every virtuous household blush for shame. The foundations of morality are shaken in order that gamblers in politics might succeed, for it is considered disgraceful to fail. He referred to bribetakers, and said there were not many but would take a bribe. They were like Aldermen in some cities who only take office to make money. But it was gratifying that in all history no line of kings ever stood higher for morality than the American Presidents.

Hon. A. M. Pratt paints this picture of the President and wife twenty-three years ago at Bryn, Ohio: "Twenty-three years ago Mrs. Garfield sought and taught scholars in painting and drawing in this then very insignificant village, and not getting very large classes, living meanwhile in my house, the guest and friend of my then wife. The future President was frequently entertained at my table; he is a young, strong, green, great-hearted, large-headed youth, but two years from college, hopeful, full of life and push; she graceful, sweet, amiable, retiring, with a disposition as lovely as a starlit sky—both poor. Their fortune was their youth, health, hearts, intellects, hopes, and, glad am I to say, love."

Several gentlemen have remarked the anxiety of the children to learn the news from the President. Many cases have been reported of very little ones kneeling for their evening prayers who, without any advice or suggestion, have uttered most touching and loving prayers for the wounded and suffering President. We heard of one young Miss in this place, who after the news was received on Saturday evening that the President was dead, made earnest supplications for him before retiring, as she said it did not seem possible to her that he was really dead. Who dares say such prayers are idle and unheard and unanswered by the Great Physician?

The attempt on President Garfield's life forms the leading topic of discussion in the English weekly journals, which comment in the same sym pathetic strain as the dailies.

A San Francisco dispatch states that D. O. Mills has given seventy thousand dollars to the University of California, to endow a chair of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy and Civil Policy.
