The Meaning of some Medical Terms.

Some readers of the REVIEW finding technical terms contained in the bulletins from the White House somewhat new to them, and also the details of medical processes relating to symptoms with which they are but imperfectly acquainted. This is evidenced by occasional notes of inquiry. "What is tympanitis?" "What is be organized at SIX O'CLOCK, P. M., and be kept | peritonitis?" "How do the doctors flud out his temperature?" and so on. It will serve a popular purpose to explain some of these matters. The midnight bulletin between Sunday and Monday, July 3rd and 4th, said: "Some tympanitis is recognized." This caused great uneasiness to the doctors.

The meaning of it was that the abdomen of the patient was swelling up like a drum, the swelling being due to an accumulation of air or gasses in the intestinal tube or else in the peritoneum; and this is considered a very unfavorable sign in injuries like those of the President. The tympanitis hapily did not last long enough, and was not sufficiently great to cause extreme danger. The word comes from tympan, a drum-and the swelling from inflamation is variously called "tympany," "wind-dropsy" and "drum-belly."

"Peritonitis," which the doctors feared also, is an is an inflamation of the peritoneum, a membrane that envelopes the intestines and other abdominal organs, and generally the interior of the abdomen. This membrane takes its name from two Greek words which express its meaning -around, and to stretch; peritoneum, therefore, meaning in this instance a membrane that stretches around or about the intestines. Indamation of that membrane, or "peritonitis," always marks a dangerous phase of disease or injury Office Means' Block.

The temperature of a sick or wounded person indicates the presence or absence of the inflamatory condition, and in cases like this, is watched with great solicitude. The temperature is ascertained by placing the bulb of a small thermometer, specially adapted to the purpose, in the mouth of the patient, or sometimes under the armpit. the average natural heat of the human body in a good condition of health is 982 degrees of Farenheit's scale. It is usually marked on our thermometer as "blood heat" at the 98th degree. In very inflamed conditions, the temperature of patients has been observed to rise as high as 108 degrees in children and to 107 in adults. Anything above 104 or 105 is regarded as very serious by physicians. The President's temperature has risen several times to 108, or ten degrees above the normal or natural. In Asiatic cholera the temperature sinks as low as 77, when even the breath of the patient feels cold

The fluctuations of the pulse are noted carefully in the daily bulletins. In good health, and when the body is quiet, the natural beats of the pulse of an adult male are about sixty to seventy a minute. There are considerable differences, however, even in healthy persons, according to the comparative quiet or activity of the body, and whether standing, sitting or lying down. There are differences, too, at different periods of the day, the greatest frequency of the pulse beats occurring about the middle of the day, and the least about midnight. All other things being equal the pulse is quicker in the morning than in the evening. In conditions of profound coma, morbid sleep or lethargy the pulse beats have dropped as iow as 17 in a minute, and they have mounted up as high as 200 in children afflicted with water on the brain. Since his injury the President's pulse has fluctuated between ninety-four beats a minute to one hundred and twenty-six. This last is about twice as frequent as the pulse beats in a state of health and in a quiet, recumbent position.

Frequency of "respiratation" is likewise a feature of the bulletins. Since he was wounded his respiration has ranged nineteen to twenty-four breathings a minute. In health and when free from any exciting cause, the number of breathings per minute is from fourteen to eighteen; but in conditions of disease it sometimes falls as low as seveu breaths a minute, and rises as high as a hundred.
