It must be exceedingly gratifying to all true and loyal citizens to see the universal solicitude shown in the welfare of the President, by all classes irrespective of political creed or sectional strife since the attempt to assassinate the good man. It has brought to the surface strong ties of general brotherhood and a natural feeling of common national interest heretofore hidden deep under partisan strife and sectional hatred. The announcement of the diabolical act, had no sooner gone forth on the electric wires, than indignation and sorrow were expressed throughout the land and messages of condolence forwarded to the wounded man and sympathy given his respected family. And the South, supposed to take little stock in the Chief Magistrate, only as compelled to submit to his rule by the strong arm of the law, has nobly come to the front, given succor to the nation and exhibited a deep anxiety in the painful situation that much atones for its past hatred and disloyalty. It has been a dangerous channel to pass through, to feel the pulse of the nation in a paralyzing crisis, but out of the diagnosis comes the gratifying report that we are a united people, healthy at heart and prepared for ordeals and calamities that would throw into a general panic if not produce anarchy in any other nation in the world.

The fact is we have a good and wise President and the masses know it. He was guiding the Ship of State majestically along, meeting with remarkable tact and sagacity the adverse winds, keeping off the shoals of corruption, commanding the helm himself, not submitting to those of the crew who would usurp his power and direct the course contrary to his own revised and safe chart. We also notice with pride that a day of fasting and prayer has been appointed by Kentucky and Arkansas—States lately in rebellion and which at the President's election gave large majorities against him.

Hon. Joseph E. Brown, of Georgia, in conversation with Postmaster General James recently related an incident which may have an important bearing in determining the question of motive in Guiteau's crime. He said that having occasion to visit the State Department, May 17, in company with a friend, they met two men coming out, one of whom he subsequently identified from his photograph, to be Guiteau. He seemed to be passionately excited, and as they passed exclaimed to his companion: "They have excluded me from the White House but you will see that I will get even with those fellows yet." The speaker's language and manners attracted Mr. Brown's attention, and he thought at the time that vengeance of some kind was meant against the Secretary of State. When he learned subsequently from reading District Attorney Corkhill's narrative that the prisoner resolved to kill President Garfield on the eighteenth day of May, the day following this speech, he went to the District Attorney, satisfied himself as to the identity of the speaker, and gave the above testimony, which will probably be used in the government's case.

The Governor of Texas having refused to unite in a call for a day of general Thanksgiving when the President shall recover, a mass meeting, composed of men of all political parties and creeds, was held in Dallas to protest against the attitude of Gov. Roberts regarding it. Speeches were made by prominent citizens and the following resolution adopted: "Resolved, That the citizens of Dallas will spend the day set apart by other States as a day of jubilee and thanksgiving at the recovery of our President. Other cities of Texas are invited to do likewise."

President Garfield and Judge Black have recently become the owners of a large farm in Alexandria county, Va., lying within view of the White House. They acquired a small portion of the tract partly by purchase and partly as a fee for services. The whole tract was mortgaged, and in order to save their part they instructed an agent to buy the whole of it when the foreclosure sale occurred. While the President has been lying ill the sale has been made and his farm secured.
