Another Note of Warning.

The National Republican League directed a letter to each delegate to the Republican State Convention in reference to the nomination of a candidate for State Treasurer. The address is signed by the members of the Executive Committee consisting of Wharton Barker, Chairman; Samuel S. Hollingsworth, Samuel W. Pennypacker, Edward R. Wood, Henry Reed, Mayer Sulzberger and Silas W. Pettit. The document reads as follows:

To the Delegates elected to the Republican State Convention:

We address you in full confidence that you will not make the mistake of supposing the nomination of a candidate for State Treasurer at the present time to be a matter of minor importance, and that the outcome of your deliberations will show that you have been guided by wise counsels and have had regard solely to the best interests of the party. Though the office of Treasurer is not in itself one of the highest moment, it so happens that this is the first Republican State Convention which has assembled since the new issues arose within the party, and upon you will rest the responsibility of saying where the Republicans of Pennsylvania shall stand. Back of the question of a candidate lies the question whether the party is to enter the campaign wheeled into line beside the wounded President of the United States or beside the late Senator from New York and his adherents; and by your choice you will determine it. It has now become reasonably certain that the forces that compelled the last State Convention in Pennsylvania to support a policy which if it had not been defeated at Chicago, would have been ruinous to the party and disastrous to the country, will be brought to bear upon you. All the influences that are potent in swaying the actions of men will be exerted upon you to induce you to attempt to reverse the events of the last two years, full as this period is with the story of Republican prosperity and success; to prevail upon you to set your approval upon a policy which has met deserved condemnation and to put yourselves in opposition to the sentiment or good men everywhere and to the head of the party and the nation. The attempt will be made, notwithstanding the fact that the wishes of the great majority of the masses of the party are manifested too plain to be mistaken, in the hope that any result will be accepted. But we ask you to remember, for the welfare of the organization so dear to us all, and whose future is now so full of promise, that, in the changed condition of things, party ties can no longer compel men to say by their votes that that is right which they know to be wrong; and to forget this fact is to insure disaster and defeat. The resolute determination of hundreds of thousands of Republicans not to vote in favor of a third term in the Presidency, if the issues had been forced on them, the recent change of party control in the strongly republican cities of Philadelphia and Pittsburg are only warnings to the wise; but to the blind or perverse they mean wreck and destruction. However much our party pride might wish it were otherwise, these are the facts and it behooves you and all of us to recognize them.

Gen. Grant denies the report of frequent visits by him to Arthur and consultations with the Vice President and other public men in reference to political contingencies at Washington. Grant says he has met no one who showed more profound sincere sorrow for the President's condition than Arthur. Grant does not believe there has been any consultation of the character described between Arthur and his political friends. He says Arthur could have no sane friend who would intrude such a subject upon him and he is the last man who would submit to such intrusions.
