The Nation in Mourning!

President GARFIELD is no more. He died at 10:55 last night from the effects of the assassin's bullet, after over eleven weeks of intense but patient suffering.—It is a blow hard for the nation to bear. But it's the Heavenly Father's will, and we must not murmur. May He overrule this seeming calamity to His own glory and the good of the afflicted people. Not only the American Nation, who had learned to love the dead hero for his great personal worth, no less than for his wisdom and goodness as a statesman and ruler, but the civilized world to-day mourn the death of one of the greatest as well as the best men of the present century. Peace to his ashes. Our loss is his unspeakable gain.

All the members of the Cabinet except Blaine and Lincoln were at Long Branch when the President died and at once notified Vice President Arthur, and he will at once assume the duties of the Presidential office.
