NESTOR, of the Senate, has the "run" on cigars now. He is having manufactured expressly for his own trade the "Senate" brand, of cigar, which is very popular with lovers of the "weed." Good judges pronounce it equal in flavor to the best Havana.

WHAT THE CIRCUS COST—Under the above caption the last Wellsboro, Agitator recounts several rascally transactions by followers of the Circus which visited that place last week. Here are some of them:

What we supposed might happen did happen. Mr. Thomas Clark, a very respectable farmer of Delmar township, came to town and a traveling circus hanger-on who relieved him of $1,000. The transfer of the money was effected by a very simple confidence game.

It seems that a stranger accosted Mr. Clark on Main street, informing him that he and his father were engaged in buying cattle extensively, and that he wished to find some farmer who was posted in the cattle business, with whom he could make his headquarters. Mr. Clark proved to be just his man, for he had cattle to sell. The stranger then wanted to know if the First National Bank was a sound institution in which it would be safe for his father to deposit his funds to be used in the cattle business. Mr. Clark assured him that the Bank was all right. While Mr. Clark was talking with the interesting stranger another man came up and roughly accosted the cattle buyer, claiming that he (stranger No. 2) could show more money than the cattle buyer and his friend, Mr. Clark, both together. One word led to another, and finally the second stranger offered to bet $200 that the cattle-buyer couldn't show $1,000. The cattle-buyer then took Mr. Clark one side and told him confidently that the stranger had been him out of $200 a few days before, and that here was a chance to get even with him. Mr. Clark thought he could soon raise $1,000, and it was arranged that the cattle-buyer should make the bet with the stranger; that Mr. Clark should raise the money to show, and that when the wager was won the two should share the $200 equally between them.

Mr. Clark went to C. C. M. there to borrow the $1,000, and that gentleman lent it to him, joining him in making a bank note for the sum. Mr. Clark obtained the money, put with it $60 dollars that he had in his pocket and went with his new friend to the circus grounds to win the $200 wager. The stranger was soon found, and the money was shown to him. The stranger wanted to take it to count; but Mr. Clark was too sharp to allow this. He proposed to keep the money in his own hand and let the stranger count one end of the bills. The stranger proceeded to do this quite slowly and carefully, and when he had got about half way through he suddenly twitched the bundle of bills from Mr. Clark's hand and ran off. Mr. Clark was considerably excited, as a matter of course; but his friend assured him that the other man was only playing him a silly trick, and that he would soon be back with the money. This quieted him somewhat; but soon his friend also disappeared, and Mr. Clark began to fully realize that his money was lost.

During the afternoon Mr. Clark went to a barber and had his whiskers shaved off and otherwise disguised himself, hoping that he might find the men who had robbed him. He didn't find them, however, and the next day he followed the circus to Addison, taking I. M. Bodine, Esq., with him. But the search proved unavailing, and it is now evident that Mr. Clark will never see his $1,000 again.

Wednesday night after the circus a Middlebury man, who had a little too much whisky aboard and a pair of new boots on his feet, was walking up Charleston street, when he met three men. One of the three said, "How d'ye do, uncle?" "How d'ye do?" said the Middlebury man. The three strangers stopped and looked at the man, the moon being very bright. One of the three said, "You have got a new pair of boots, haven't you?" "Yes," said the Middlebury man. "And they hurt you, don't they?" "Yes," the man admitted. "Well, sit down here and we will fix them so they won't hurt you," said the sympathetic strangers. So the old gentleman sat down on the bench in front of Ribberolle's tannery, and the strangers pulled his boots off and walked away with them. They didn't hurt his feet after that.

A colored man from Stokesdale came to town on circus-day with $10 in his pocket. He invested $8 in a new coat and the rest of his money took him to the circus and bought him some liquid refreshments. Wednesday night he went into the Ribberolle House and began to dance to the music of a violin that one of the showmen was playing. Warming up with the exercise, he sat down and took off his new coat and gave it to a stranger to hold. When he grew tired of dancing he turned to get his coat, and the stranger and coat had disappeared.

One of the workmen in the cigar factory in this borough went down to the Ribberolle House to see the circus off. While crossing the street from the hotel to the depot, about two o'clock in the morning, he was knocked down and robbed of his watch and pocket book. The unfortunate man whose name we have not learned, was badly cut about the face. There were several other rows of less importance; but it would be tedious to detail them.

About the busiest place in town is the Five Cent Store. The designation, by the way, is a misnomer. It should be called the Bazaar, as it contains almost everything; articles from the lowest to the highest price. It is a favorite resort for the ladies. So say the brightest and busiest organ dealers throughout the land, who are furnishing this matchless instrument to a musical public, which is rapidly learning to distinguish its marvellously pure and beautiful voice from that which is not music.
