DOES ADVERTISING PAY?—The best answer to that question is the indisputable fact that successful men everywhere advertise. But to make advertising pay it wants to be done steadily and judiciously. There is no business man in Yonkers but would be benefited by putting down among regular expenses from $15, to $100 a year for advertising, according to the character and extent of the business. It makes the name and business familiar to the public, and pays in more ways than one.—Yonkers Statesman.

The season of marrying and giving in marriage has opened suddenly and with full force, and the joys that it distributes are not restricted to the couples who imagine that ministers are making them the happiest beings in existence. A great many people are made happy by a wedding, and the bliss begins long beforehand. There is an advance installment of ecstasy for that one of the bride's friends who can first go about and tell when the happy event will occur; there is joy for the family dressmaker, even if she declares herself to be half crazy; the bride's oldest sister rejoices because she is soon to succeed the bride as the leading attraction in the family parlors; sundry other young ladies are happy because they are soon to become bridesmaids, and perhaps the father, who is trying to look sober because he is to lose a daughter, is slyly indulging in an immense amount of delight over the thought that the lady's bills will hereafter be presented to some other man. And the groom's friends are not lacking in anticipation. Many a young bachelor who is half inclined to envy his marrying friend has his pensive reflections end in cheerful resignation as he realizes that the list of givers of dinners and parties is to be increased by the founding of a new home. Happiest of all people, however, are the hotel landlords whom the newly married couple patronize while on their wedding tour. Newly made husbands have the reputation of never disputing bills, so the landlord's joy is of a kind that can be deposited in bank; it does not grow less dear through familiarity of growing years, and is the subject of more admiration, respect and envy than all the bliss of all the married couples in the world.

Accident on the Lehigh Valley.

Express train No. 8, which left Philadelphia Saturday evening and was due here at 4 o'clock yesterday morning, did not arrive until 3 o'clock in the afternoon, having met with an accident at Vosburg switch this side of Tunkhannock. A north bound freight train was holding the switch and the signals indicated that the main track was clear, but when too late to prevent a collision engineer Tom Moore discovered that the front end of the freight was on the main track. How it happened to be there is not explained, but it is surmised the engineer and fireman were both asleep. The engineer and fireman of the express jumped from the engine and were slightly injured. The engine and express car were badly damaged but the passengers all escaped unharmed.
