MARTYRED.

[We find the following little poetic gem from the pen of our gifted literary friend and occasional contributor, Mrs. LEBARON, in the Youth's Companion of October 20th. and take the liberty of transferring it to our columns. It is a beautiful tribute to the Martyr Presidents.]

In the strange border-land of Death two phantoms meet
Greeting, each wonderingly, as new souls greet:
"What doest thou, O ghost," the younger said,
"Where, to and fro, I hear thy solemn tread?"
"I am on duty, Brother. O'er these earth-bound heights
I still walk sentinel above a people's rights."

"For that thou wert unflinched!" the new ghost cried,
"But I? I know not why I should have died;
Wide stretched my harvest field; my arm was strong;
I battled for the right, and fell by wrong."

The tall form pointed earthward: "See, a world in prayer;
Hearts bowed, and eyes turned heavenward, every-where."
Ah, blessed ghost! Ah, thou too, slain by man!
A hallowed instrument for some wise plan—
O'er burning ploughshares both our feet have trod;
I for my brother died, but thou art called of God."

MARIE LEBARON.
